

THE HISTORY OF MIDDLE-EARTH
CHRISTOPHER TOLKIEN

THE LAYS OF BELERIAND

— 3 —

J.R.R. TOLKIEN

ከእነዚህ ሁሉ ዘመናት በፊት የታሰበው የጥንቃቄ አስተሳሰብ ነው።

J. R. R. TOLKIEN

The Lays of Beleriand

Christopher Tolkien

 HarperCollins Publishers

ከብክ ሥዎ በጥጥር ይገኛል፡ ሥዎ በጥጥር ይገኛል ሥዎ በጥጥር ይገኛል በጥጥር ይገኛል ሥዎ በጥጥር ይገኛል ሥዎ በጥጥር ይገኛል ሥዎ በጥጥር ይገኛል
 ሥዎ በጥጥር ይገኛል ሥዎ በጥጥር ይገኛል ሥዎ በጥጥር ይገኛል ሥዎ በጥጥር ይገኛል

COPYRIGHT

HarperCollinsPublishers Ltd
1 London Bridge Street
London SE1 9GF

www.tolkien.co.uk

www.tolkienestate.com

First published in Great Britain by George Allen & Unwin (Publishers) Ltd 1985

Copyright © The Tolkien Estate Limited and C.R. Tolkien 1985

® and 'Tolkien'® are registered trade marks of The Tolkien Estate Limited

All rights reserved under International and Pan-American Copyright Conventions. By payment of the required fees, you have been granted the non-exclusive, non-transferable right to access and read the text of this ebook on screen. No part of this text may be reproduced, transmitted, downloaded, decompiled, reverse engineered, or stored in or introduced into any information storage and retrieval system, in any form or by any means, whether electronic or mechanical, now known or hereinafter invented, without the express written permission of HarperCollins.

Source ISBN: 9780261102262

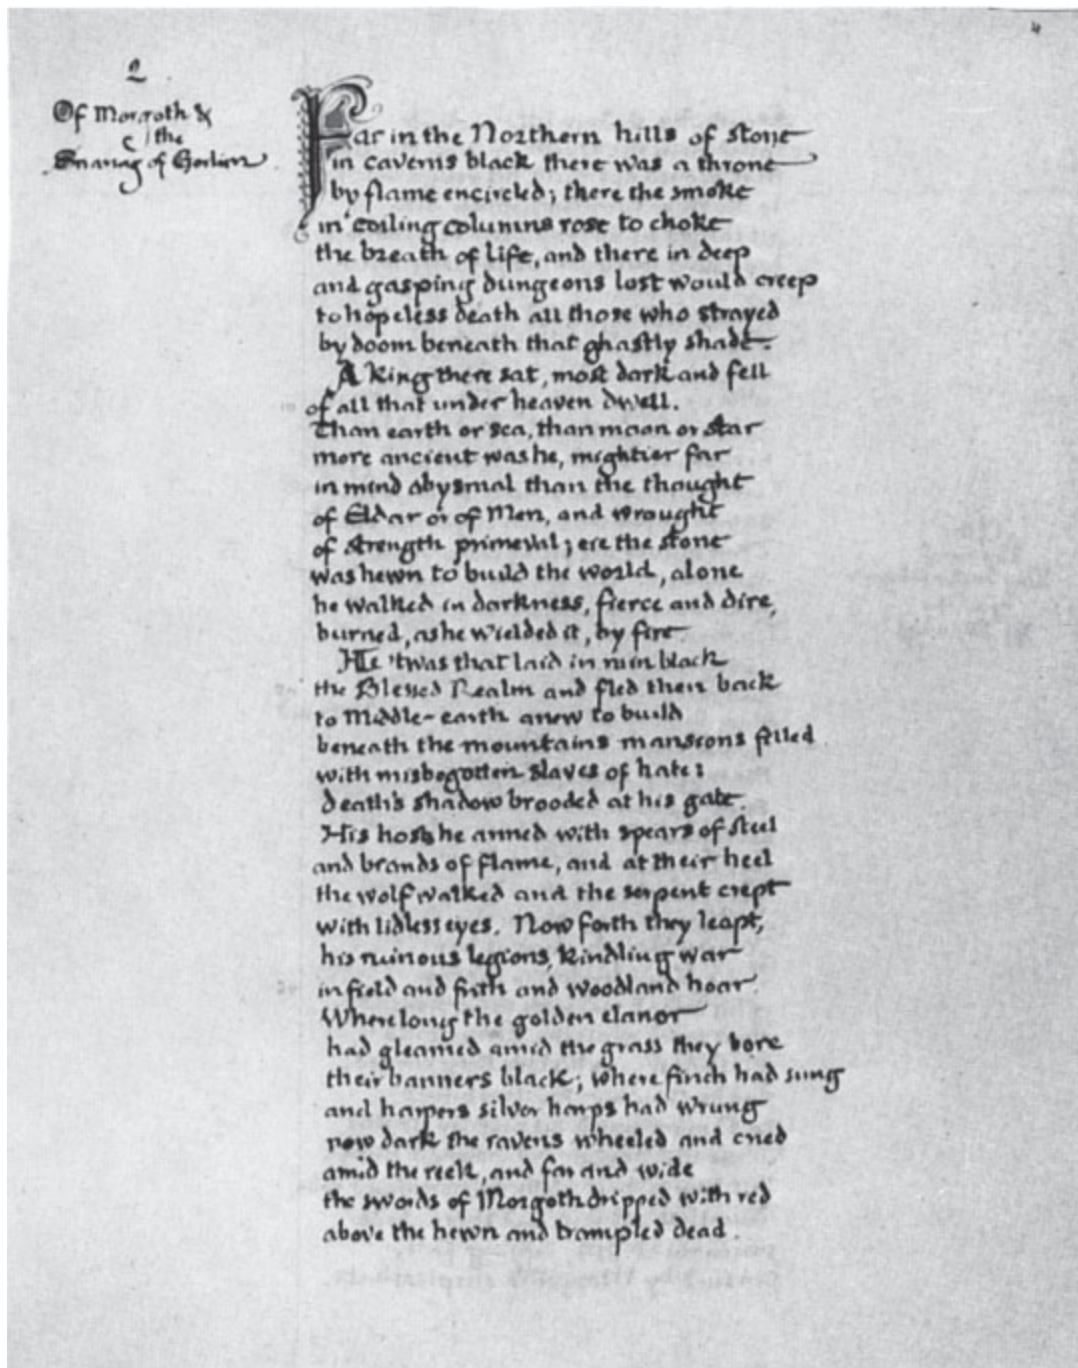

Ebook Edition © SEPTEMBER 2019 ISBN: 9780007348206

Version: 2019-09-02

Find out more about HarperCollins and the environment at www.harpercollins.co.uk/green

HarperCollinsPublishers has made every reasonable effort to ensure that any picture content and written content in this ebook has been included or removed in accordance with the contractual and technological constraints in operation at the time of publication.

THE LAYS OF BELERIAND

The opening of Canto 2 in the Lay of Leithian recommenced

CONTENTS

Cover
Title Page
Copyright
A Note to the Reader

Preface

- I THE LAY OF THE CHILDREN OF HÚRIN
 - Prologue (Húrin and Morgoth)
 - I Túrin's Fostering
 - II Beleg
 - III Failivrin
 - Second Version of the Lay:
 - I (Húrin and Morgoth)
 - II Túrin's Fostering
- II POEMS EARLY ABANDONED
 - The Flight of the Noldoli
 - Fragment of an alliterative Lay of Eärendel
 - The Lay of the Fall of Gondolin
- III THE LAY OF LEITHIAN
 - Canto
 - I (Of Thingol)
 - II (Gorlim's betrayal and Beren's revenge)
 - III (Beren's meeting with Lúthien)
 - IV (Beren before Thingol)
 - V (Lúthien's captivity in Doriath)
 - VI (Beren in Nargothrond)
 - VII (Beren and Felagund before Thû)

VIII (Lúthien in Nargothrond)
IX (The defeat of Thû)
X (The attack by Celegorm and Curufin) XI (The disguising of Beren and Lúthien and the journey to Angband)
XII (Fingolfin and Morgoth; the meeting with Carcharoth)
XIII (Beren and Lúthien in Angband)
XIV (Escape from Angband)
Unwritten Cantos
Appendix: Commentary by C. S. Lewis

IV THE LAY OF LEITHIAN RECOMMENCED

Note on the original submission of the Lay of Leithian and
The Silmarillion in 1937

Glossary of Obsolete, Archaic, and Rare Words and Meanings
Searchable Terms

Other books by J.R.R. Tolkien
About the Publisher

A NOTE TO THE READER

The internal page references in this text relate to the printed version of the book; they do not match the pages of your ebook. Hyperlinks have been added which will direct you to the relevant reference. After a hyperlink has been activated we recommend using your device's "Back" button to return to the original location. Where no hyperlink is present you can use your ebook reader's search tool to find a specific word or passage.

All of the special characters below appear in this ebook. If your e-reader is not displaying these characters you may find this affects your reading enjoyment of the ebook.

Text	Character
Foalókë	ë
Corthûn	û
Ælfwine	Æ
i Hîn	î
nemnað	ð

PREFACE

This third part of 'The History of Middle-earth' contains the two major poems by J. R. R. Tolkien concerned with the legends of the Elder Days: the Lay of the Children of Húrin in alliterative verse, and the Lay of Leithian in octosyllabic couplets. The alliterative poem was composed while my father held appointments at the University of Leeds (1920–5); he abandoned it for the Lay of Leithian at the end of that time, and never turned to it again. I have found no reference to it in any letter or other writing of his that has survived (other than the few words cited on p. 3), and I do not recollect his ever speaking of it. But this poem, which though extending to more than 2000 lines is only a fragment in relation to what he once planned, is the most sustained embodiment of his abiding love of the resonance and richness of sound that might be achieved in the ancient English metre. It marks also an important stage in the evolution of the Matter of the Elder Days, and contains passages that strongly illumine his imagination of Beleriand; it was, for example, in this poem that the great redoubt of Nargothrond arose from the primitive caves of the Rodothlim in the Lost Tales, and only in this poem was Nargothrond described. It exists in two versions, the second being a revision and enlargement that proceeds much less far into the story, and both are given in this book.

My father worked on the Lay of Leithian for six years, abandoning it in its turn in September 1931. In 1929 it was read so far as it then went by C. S. Lewis, who sent him a most ingenious commentary on a part of it; I acknowledge with thanks the permission of C. S. Lewis PTE Limited to include this.

In 1937 he said in a letter that 'in spite of certain virtuous passages' the Lay of Leithian had 'grave defects' (see p. 366). A decade or more later, he received a detailed, and remarkably unconstrained, criticism of the poem from someone who knew and admired his poetry. I do not know for certain who this was. In choosing 'the staple octosyllabic couplet of romance,' he wrote, my father had chosen one of the most difficult of forms 'if one wishes to avoid monotony and sing-song in a very long poem. I am often astonished by your success, but it is by no means consistently maintained.' His strictures on the diction of the Lay included archaisms so archaic that they needed annotation, distorted order, use of emphatic doth or did where there is no emphasis, and language sometimes flat and conventional (in contrast to passages of 'gorgeous description'). There is no record of what my father thought of this criticism (written when The Lord of the Rings was already completed), but it must be associated in some way with the fact that in 1949 or 1950 he returned to the Lay of Leithian and began a revision that soon became virtually a new poem; and relatively little though he wrote of it, its advance on the old version in all those respects in which that had been censured is so great as to give it a sad prominence in the long list of his works that might have been. The new Lay is included in this book, and a page from a fine manuscript of it is reproduced as frontispiece.

The sections of both poems are interleaved with commentaries which are primarily concerned to trace the evolution of the legends and the lands they are set in.

The two pages reproduced from the Lay of the Children of Húrin (p. 15) are from the original manuscript of the first version, lines 297-317 and 318-33. For differences between the readings of the manuscript and those of the printed text see pp. 4-5. The page from the Lay of Leithian in Elvish script (p. 299) comes from the 'A' version of the original Lay (see pp. 150-1), and there are certain differences in the text from the 'B' version which is that printed. These pages from the original manuscripts are reproduced with the permission of the Bodleian Library, Oxford, and I thank the staff of the Department of Western Manuscripts at the Bodleian for their assistance.

The two earlier volumes in this series (the first and second parts of The Book of Lost Tales) are referred to as 'I' and 'II'. The fourth volume will contain the 'Sketch of the Mythology' (1926), from which the Silmarillion 'tradition' derived; the Quenta Noldorinwa or History of the Noldoli (1930); the first map of the North-west of Middle-earth; the Ambarkanta ('Shape of the World') by Rúmil, together with the only existing maps of the entire World; the earliest Annals of Valinor and Annals of Beleriand, by Pengolod the Wise of Gondolin; and the fragments of translations of the Quenta and Annals from Elvish into Anglo-Saxon by Ælfwine of England.

I

THE LAY OF THE CHILDREN OF HÚRIN

There exists a substantial manuscript (28 pages long) entitled 'Sketch of the Mythology with especial reference to "The Children of Húrin"'; and this 'Sketch' is the next complete narrative, in the prose tradition, after the Lost Tales (though a few fragmentary writings are extant from the intervening time). On the envelope containing this manuscript my father wrote at some later time:

Original 'Silmarillion'. Form orig[inally] composed c. 1926-30 for R. W. Reynolds to explain background of 'alliterative version' of Túrin & the Dragon: then in progress (unfinished) (begun c. 1918).

He seems to have written first '1921' before correcting this to '1918'.

R. W. Reynolds taught my father at King Edward's School, Birmingham (see Humphrey Carpenter, Biography, p. 47). In a passage of his diary written in August 1926 he wrote that 'at the end of last year' he had heard again from R. W. Reynolds, that they had corresponded subsequently, and that he had sent Reynolds many of his poems, including Tinúviel and Túrin ('Tinúviel meets with qualified approval, it is too prolix, but how could I ever cut it down, and the specimen I sent of Túrin with little or none'). This would date the 'Sketch' as originally written (it was subsequently heavily revised) definitely in 1926, probably fairly early in the year. It must have accompanied the specimen of Túrin (the alliterative poem), the background of which it was written to explain, to Anacapri, where Reynolds was then living in retirement.

My father took up his appointment to the Professorship of Anglo-Saxon at Oxford in the winter term (October–December) of 1925, though for that term he had to continue to teach at Leeds also, since the appointments overlapped. There can be no doubt that at any rate the great bulk of the alliterative Children of Húrin (or Túrin) was completed at Leeds, and I think it virtually certain that he had ceased to work on it before he moved south: in fact there seems nothing to oppose to the natural assumption that he left ‘Túrin’ for ‘Tinúviel’ (the Lay of Leithian), which he began according to his diary in the summer of 1925 (see p. 159 and footnote).

For the date of its commencement we have only my father’s later (and perhaps hesitant) statement that it was ‘begun c. 1918’. A terminus a quo is provided by a page of the earliest manuscript of the poem, which is written on a slip from the Oxford English Dictionary bearing the printer’s stamp May 1918. On the other hand the name Melian which occurs near the beginning of the earliest manuscript shows it to be later than the typescript version of the Tale of Tinúviel, where the Queen’s name was Gwenethlin and only became Melian in the course of its composition (II. 51); and the manuscript version of that Tale which underlies the typescript seems itself to have been one of the last completed elements in the Lost Tales (see I. 204).

The Children of Húrin exists in two versions, which I shall refer to as I and II, both of them found in manuscript and later typescript (IA, IB; IIA, IIB). I do not think that the second is significantly later than the first; it is indeed possible, and would not be in any way uncharacteristic, that my father began work on II while he was still composing at a later point in I. II is essentially an expansion of I, with many lines, and blocks of lines, left virtually unchanged. Until the second version is reached it will be sufficient to refer simply to 'A' and 'B', the manuscript and typescript of the first version.

The manuscript A consists of two parts: first (a) a bundle of small slips, numbered 1-32. The poem is here in a very rough state with many alternative readings, and in places at least may represent the actual beginnings, the first words written down. This is followed by (b) a set of large sheets of examination paper from the University of Leeds, numbered 33 ff., where the poem is for the most part written out in a more finished form – the second stage of composition; but my father wrote in line-numbers continuously through (a) and (b) – lines 1-528 in (a), lines 528 ff. in (b). We have thus one sole text, not two, without any overlap; and if (a), the slips, ever existed in the form of (b), the examination sheets, that part has disappeared. In part (b) there are many later emendations in pencil.

Based on this manuscript is the typescript B. This introduces changes not found in A or its emendations; and it was itself emended both in ink and pencil, doubtless involving several movements of revision. To take a single line as exemplification: line 8 was written first in A:

Lo! Thalion in the throng of thickest battle

The line was emended, in two stages, to

Lo! Thalion Húrin in the throng of battle and this was the form in B as typed; but B was emended, in two stages, to

Lo! Húrin Thalion in the hosts of war

It is obvious that to set this and a great many other similar cases out in a textual apparatus would be a huge task and the result impossibly complicated. The text that follows is therefore, so far as purely metrical-stylistic changes are concerned, that of B as emended, and apart from a few special cases there is no mention in the notes of earlier readings.

In the matter of names, however, the poem presents great difficulty; for changes were made at quite different times and were not introduced consistently throughout. If the latest form in any particular passage is made the principle of choice, irrespective of any other consideration, then the text will have Morwin at lines 105, 129, Mavwin 137 etc., Morwen 438, 472; Ulmo 1469, but Ylmir 1529 and subsequently; Nirnaith Ornoth 1448, but Nirnaith Únoth 1543. If the later Nirnaith Ornoth is adopted at 1543, it seems scarcely justifiable to intrude it at lines 13 and 218 (where the final form is Nínin Unothradin). I have decided finally to abandon overall consistency, and to treat individual names as seems best in the circumstances; for example, I give Ylmir rather than Ulmo at line 1469, for consistency with all the other occurrences, and while changing Únoth to Ornoth at line 1543 I retain Ornoth rather than the much later Arnediad at line 26 of the second version – similarly I prefer the earlier Finweg to Fingon (1975, second version 19, 520) and Bansil, Glingol to Belthil, Glingal (2027–8). All such points are documented in the notes.

A has no title. In B as typed the title was The Golden Dragon, but this was emended to Túrin Son of Húrin & Glórund the Dragon. The second version of the poem was first titled Túrin, but this was changed to The Children of Húrin, and I adopt this, the title by which my father referred to the poem in the 1926 ‘Sketch’, as the general title of the work.

The poem in the first version is divided into a short prologue (Húrin and Morgoth) without sub-title and three long sections, of which the first two (‘Túrin’s Fostering’ and ‘Beleg’) were only introduced later into the typescript; the third (‘Failivrin’) is marked both in A and in B as typed.

The detail of the typescript is largely preserved in the present text, but I have made the capitalisation rather more consistent, added in occasional accents, and increased the number of breaks in the text. The space between the half-lines is marked in the second part of the A-text and begins at line 543 in B.

I have avoided the use of numbered notes to the text, and all annotation is related to the line-numbers of the poem. This annotation (very largely concerned with variations of names, and comparisons with names in the Lost Tales) is found at the end of each of the three major parts, followed by a commentary on the matter of that part.

Throughout, the Tale refers to the Tale of Turambar and the Foalókë (ll. 69 ff.); Narn refers to the Narn i Hîn Húrin, in Unfinished Tales pp. 57 ff.

TÚRIN SON OF HÚRIN & GLÓRUND THE DRAGON

Lo! the golden dragon of the God of Hell, the gloom of the woods of the world now gone,
the woes of Men, and weeping of Elves fading faintly down forest pathways, is now to tell, and the name most tearful 5 of Níniel the sorrowful, and the name most sad of Thalion’s son Túrin o’erthrown by fate.

Lo! Húrin Thalion in the hosts of war was whelmed, what time the white-clad armies of Elfinesse were all to ruin 10

by the dread hate driven of Delu-Morgoth.
 That field is yet by the folk naméd Nínin Unothradin, Unnumbered Tears.
 There the children of Men, chieftain and warrior, fled and fought not, but the folk of the Elves 15 they betrayed with treason, save that true man only,
 Thalion Erithámrod and his thanes like gods.
 There in host on host the hill-fiend Orcs overbore him at last in that battle terrible, by the bidding of Bauglir bound him living, 20 and pulled down the proudest of the princes of Men.
 To Bauglir's halls in the hills builded, to the Hells of Iron and the hidden caverns they haled the hero of Hithlum's land, Thalion Erithámrod, to their thronéd lord, 25 whose breast was burnt with a bitter hatred, and wroth he was that the wrack of war had not taken Turgon ten times a king, even Finweg's heir; nor Fëanor's children, makers of the magic and immortal gems. 30
 For Turgon towering in terrible anger a pathway clove him with his pale sword-blade out of that slaughter – yea, his swath was plain through the hosts of Hell like hay that lieth all low on the lea where the long scythe goes. 35
 A countless company that king did lead through the darkened dales and drear mountains out of ken of his foes, and he comes not more in the tale; but the triumph he turned to doubt of Morgoth the evil, whom mad wrath took. 40 Nor spies sped him, nor spirits of evil,

nor his wealth of wisdom to win him tidings, whither the nation of the Gnomes was gone.
Now a thought of malice, when Thalion stood,
bound, unbending, in his black dungeon, 45
then moved in his mind that remembered well how Men were accounted all mightless and frail
by the Elves and their kindred; how only treason could master the magic whose mazes wrapped the children of Corthûn, and cheated his 50 purpose.

‘Is it dauntless Hurin,’ quoth Delu-Morgoth, ‘stout steel-handed, who stands before me, a captive living as a coward might be?
Knowest thou my name, or need’st be told what hope he has who is haled to Angband – 55 the bale most bitter, the Balrogs’ torment?’

‘I know and I hate. For that knowledge I fought thee by fear unfettered, nor fear I now,’ said Thalion there, and a thane of Morgoth on the mouth smote him; but Morgoth smiled: 60 ‘Fear when thou feelest, and the flames lick thee, and the whips of the Balrogs thy white flesh brand.
Yet a way canst win, an thou wishest, still to lessen thy lot of lingering woe.
Go question the captives of the accursed 65 people

I have taken, and tell me where Turgon is hid;
how with fire and death I may find him soon,
where he lurketh lost in lands forgot.
Thou must feign thee a friend faithful in anguish, and their inmost hearts thus open and search. 70

Then, if truth thou tellest, thy triple bonds
I will bid men unbind, that abroad thou fare in my service to search the secret places following the footsteps of these foes of the Gods.'

'Build not thy hopes so high, O Bauglir – 75
I am no tool for thy evil treasons;
torment were sweeter than a traitor's stain.'

'If torment be sweet, treasure is liever.
The hoards of a hundred hundred ages,
the gems and jewels of the jealous Gods, 80 are mine, and a meed shall I mete thee thence, yea, wealth to glut the Worm of Greed.'

'Canst not learn of thy lore when thou look'st on a foe,
O Bauglir unblest? Bray no longer
of the things thou hast thieved from the Three 85 Kindreds.
In hate I hold thee, and thy hests in scorn.'

'Boldly thou bravest me. Be thy boast rewarded,' in mirth quod Morgoth, 'to me now the deeds, and thy aid I ask not; but anger thee nought if little they like thee. Yea, look thereon 90 helpless to hinder, or thy hand to raise.'

Then Thalion was thrust to Thangorodrim, that mountain that meets the misty skies
on high o'er the hills that Hithlum sees blackly brooding on the borders of the north. 95

To a stool of stone on its steepest peak they bound him in bonds, an unbreakable chain, and the Lord of Woe there laughing stood,
then cursed him for ever and his kin and seed with a doom of dread, of death and horror. 100
There the mighty man unmoved sat;
but unveiled was his vision, that he viewed afar
all earthly things with eyes enchanted that fell on his folk – a fiend's torment.

I

TÚRIN'S FOSTERING

Lo! the lady Morwin in the Land of Shadows 105 waited in the woodland for her well-beloved;
but he came never from the combat home.
No tidings told her whether taken or dead,
or lost in flight he lingered yet.
Laid waste his lands, and his lieges slain, 110
and men unmindful of his mighty lordship dwelt in Dorlómin and dealt unkindly with his widowed wife; and she went with child, who a son must succour now sadly orphaned, Túrin Thaliodrin of tender years. 115
Then in days of blackness was her daughter born, and was named Nienor, a name of tears
that in language of eld is Lamentation.
Then her thoughts turned to Thingol the Elf-king, and the dancer of Doriath, his daughter 120 Tinúviel,
whom the boldest of the brave, Beren Ermabwed, had won to wife. He once had known firmest friendship to his fellow in arms, Thalion Erithámrod – so thought she now, and said to her son, ‘My sweetest child, 125

our friends are few, and thy father comes not.
Thou must fare afar to the folk of the wood,
where Thingol is throned in the Thousand Caves.
If he remember Morwin and thy mighty sire
he will fain foster thee, and feats of arms 130
he will teach thee, the trade of targe and sword, and Thalion’s son no thrall shall be – but remember thy mother when thy manhood nears.’

Heavy boded the heart of Húrin’s son, yet he weened her words were wild with grief, 135 and he denied her not, for no need him seemed.
Lo! henchmen had Morwin, Halog and Gumlin, who were young of yore ere the youth of Thalion, who alone of the lieges of that lord of Men steadfast in service staid beside her: 140
now she bade them brave the black mountains,
and the woods whose ways wander to evil;
though Túrin be tender and to travail unused, they must gird them and go; but glad they were not,
and Morwin mourned when men saw not. 145

Came a summer day when sun filtered warm through the woodland’s waving branches.
Then Morwin stood her mourning hiding by the gate of her garth in a glade of the woods.
At the breast she mothered her babe 150

unweaned,
and the doorpost held lest she droop for anguish.
There Gumlin guided her gallant boy, and a heavy burden was borne by Halog;
but the heart of Túrin was heavy as stone uncomprehending its coming anguish. 155

He sought for comfort, with courage saying:
'Quickly will I come from the courts of Thingol;
long ere manhood I will lead to Morwin great tale of treasure, and true comrades' –
for he wist not the weird woven by Bauglir, 160 nor the sundering sorrow that swept between.

The farewells are taken: their footsteps are turned to the dark forest: the dwelling fadeth in the tangled trees. Then in Túrin leapt his awakened heart, and he wept blindly, 165 calling 'I cannot, I cannot leave thee.

O Morwin, my mother, why makest me go?
Hateful are the hills where hope is lost.
O Morwin, my mother, I am meshed in tears.
Grim are the hills, and my home is gone.' 170

And there came his cries calling faintly
down the dark alleys of the dreary trees, and one who wept weary on the threshold heard how the hills said 'my home is gone.'

The ways were weary and woven with deceit 175
o'er the hills of Hithlum to the hidden kingdom
deep in the darkness of Doriath's forest;
and never ere now for need or wonder
had children of Men chosen that pathway, and few of the folk have followed it since. 180

There Túrin and the twain knew torment of thirst, and hunger and fear and hideous nights, for wolfriders and wandering Orcs and the Things of Morgoth thronged the woodland.
Magics were about them, that they missed their 185 ways

and strayed steerless, and the stars were hid.
Thus they passed the mountains, but the mazes of Doriath
wildered and wayworn in wanhope bound them.
They had nor bread nor water, and bled of strength their death they deemed it to die 190 forewandered,

when they heard a horn that hooted afar,
and baying dogs. It was Beleg the hunter, who farthest fared of his folk abroad ahunting by hill and hollow valley, who cared not for concourse and commerce of 195
men.

He was great of growth and goodly-limbed, but lithe of girth, and lightly on the ground
his footsteps fell as he fared towards them,
all garbed in grey and green and brown –
a son of the wilderness who wist no sire. 200

‘Who are ye?’ he asked. ‘Outlaws, or maybe hard hunted men whom hate pursueth?’

‘Nay, for famine and thirst we faint,’ saith Halog, ‘wayworn and wildered, and wot not the road.
Or hast not heard of the hills of slain, 205
or the tear-drenched field where the terror and fire of Morgoth devoured both Men and Elves?’

There Thalion Erithámrod and his thanes like gods vanished from the earth, and his valiant lady weeps yet widowed as she waits in Hithlum. 210 Thou lookest on the last of the lieges of Morwin and Thalion's son Túrin, who to Thingol's court are wending by the word of the wife of Húrin.'

Then Beleg bade them be blithe, and said:
'The Gods have guided you to good keeping. 215
I have heard of the house of Húrin the Steadfast –
and who hath not heard of the hills of slain, of Nínin Unothradin, the Unnumbered Tears?
To that war I went not, but wage a feud with the Orcs unending, whom mine arrows 220 bitter

oft stab unseen and strike to death.
I am the huntsman Beleg of the Hidden People.'
Then he bade them drink, and drew from his belt
a flask of leather full filled with wine that is bruised from the berries of the burning South 225
–

and the Gnome-folk know it, and the nation of the Elves,
and by long ways lead it to the lands of the North.
There bakéd flesh and bread from his wallet they had to their hearts' joy; but their heads were mazed
by the wine of Dor-Winion that went in their 230 veins,
and they soundly slept on the soft needles
of the tall pine-trees that towered above.
Later they wakened and were led by ways devious winding through the dark wood-realm

by slade and slope and swampy thicket 235
through lonely days and long night-times, and but for Beleg had been baffled utterly
by the magic mazes of Melian the Queen.
To the shadowy shores he showed the way where stilly that stream strikes 'fore the gates 240
of the cavernous court of the King of Doriath.
O'er the guarded bridge he gained a passage, and thrice they thanked him, and thought in their hearts
'the Gods are good' - had they guessed maybe what the future enfolded they had feared to 245 live.

To the throne of Thingol the three were come,
and their speech sped them; for he spake them fair, and held in honour Húrin the steadfast, Beren Ermabwed's brother-in-arms.
Remembering Morwin, of mortals fairest, 250
he turned not Túrin in contempt away;
said: 'O son of Húrin, here shalt sojourn in my cavernous court for thy kindred's sake.
Nor as slave or servant, but a second king's son thou shalt dwell in dear love, till thou deem'st it 255 time
to remember thy mother Morwin's loneliness.
Thou wisdom shalt win unwist of Men and weapons shalt wield as the warrior Elves,
and Thalion's son no thrall shall be.'

There tarried the twain that had tended the 260 child,

till their limbs were lightened and they longed to fare
through dread and danger to their dear lady.
But Gumlin was gone in greater years than Halog, and hoped not to home again.
Then sickness took him, and he stayed by 265 Túrin,
while Halog hardened his heart to go.
An Elfin escort to his aid was given
and magics of Melian, and a meed of gold.
In his mouth a message to Morwin was set, words of the king's will, how her wish was 270 granted;
how Thingol called her to the Thousand Caves
to fare unfearing with his folk again,
there to sojourn in solace, till her son be grown;
for Húrin the hero was held in mind, and no might had Morgoth where Melian 275 dwelt.

Of the errand of the Elves and that other Halog
the tale tells not, save in time they came to the threshold of Morwin, and Thingol's message was said where she sate in her solitary hall.
But she dared not do as was dearly bidden, 280
for Nienor her nestling was not yet weaned.
More, the pride of her people, princes of Men, had suffered her send her son to Thingol when despair sped her, but to spend her days
as alms-guest of others, even Elfin kings, 285
it liked her little; and there lived e'en now
a hope in her heart that Húrin would come,

and the dwelling was dear where he dwelt of old.
At night she would listen for a knock at the doors,
or a footstep falling that she fondly knew; 290
so she fared not forth, and her fate was woven.
Yet the thanes of Thingol she thanked nobly,
and her shame she showed not, how shorn of glory
to reward their wending she had wealth too scant;
but gave them in gift her golden things 295 that last lingered, and they led away a helm of Húrin that was hewn in war when he battled with Beren his brother-in-arms against ogres and Orcs and evil foemen;
'twas o'erwritten with runes by wrights of old. 300
She bade Thingol receive it and think of her.

Thus Halog her henchman came home, but the Elves,
the thanes of Thingol, thrust through the woods, and the message of Morwin in a month's journey, so quick their coming, to the king was said. 305
Then was Melian moved to ruth,
and courteously received the king her gift,
who deeply delved had dungeons filled with Elfin armouries of ancient gear, but he handled the helm as his hoard were 310 scant;
said: 'High were the head that upheld this thing with that token crowned of the towering dragon that Thalion Erithámrod thrice-renowned oft bore into battle with baleful foes.'
Then a thought was thrust into Thingol's 315 heart,

and Túrin he called and told when come
that Morwin his mother a mighty thing
had sent to her son, his sire's heirloom,
a helm that hammers had hardened of old, whose makers had mingled a magic therein 320 that its worth was a wonder and its wearer safe, guarded from glaive or gleaming axe –
'Lo! Húrin's helm hoard thou till manhood bids thee battle; then bravely don it'; and Túrin touched it, but took it not, 325 too weak to wield that weight as yet, and his mind mournéd for Morwin's answer,
and the first of his sorrows o'erfilled his soul.

Thus came it to pass in the court of Thingol that Túrin tarried for twelve long years 330 with Gumlin his guardian, who guided him thither when but seven summers their sorrows had laid on the son of Thalion. For the seven first his lot was lightened, since he learnt at whiles from faring folk what befell in Hithlum, 335
and tidings were told by trusty Elves,
how Morwin his mother was more at ease;
and they named Nienor that now was growing to the sweet beauty of a slender maiden.
Thus his heart knew hope, and his hap was 340 fairer.

There he waxed wonderly and won him praise
in all lands where Thingol as lord was held for the strength of his body and stoutness of heart.
Much lore he learned, and loved wisdom,
but fortune followed him in few desires; 345

oft wrong and awry what he wrought turnéd;
what he loved he lost, what he longed for he won not;
and full friendship he found not easily,
nor was lightly loved for his looks were sad.
He was gloomy-hearted, and glad seldom, 350
for the sundering sorrow that seared his youth.

On manhood's threshold he was mighty holden in the wielding of weapons; and in weaving song
he had a minstrel's mastery, but mirth was not in it, for he mourned the misery of the Men of 355 Hithlum.

Yet greater his grief grew thereafter,
when from Hithlum's hills he heard no more,
and no traveller told him tidings of Morwin.
For those days were drawing to the Doom of the Gnomes,
and the power of the Prince of the People of 360 Hell,

of the grim Glamhoth, was grown apace,
till the lands of the North were loud with their noise,
and they fell on the folk with flame and ruin
who bent not to Bauglir, or the borders passed
of dark Dorlómin with its dreary pines 365
that Hithlum unhappy is hight by Men.

There Morgoth shut them, and the Shadowy Mountains

fenced them from Faërie and the folk of the wood.
Even Beleg fared not so far abroad
as once was his wont, and the woods were 370 filled with the armies of Angband and evil deeds, while murder walked on the marches of Doriath;

only mighty magic of Melian the Queen
yet held their havoc from the Hidden People.

Two pages from the original manuscript of The Lay of the Children of Húrin

To assuage his sorrow and to sate the rage 375 and hate of his heart for the hurts of his folk then Húrin's son took the helm of his sire
and weapons weighty for the wielding of men, and went to the woods with warlike Elves;
and far in the fight his feet led him, 380

into black battle yet a boy in years.
Ere manhood's measure he met and slew the Orcs of Angband and evil things that roamed and ravened on the realm's borders.
There hard his life, and hurts he got him, 385
the wounds of shaft and warfain sword, and his prowess was proven and his praise renowned,
and beyond his years he was yielded honour;
for by him was holden the hand of ruin
from Thingol's folk, and Thû feared him – 390 Thû who was thronéd asthane most mighty neath Morgoth Bauglir; whom that mighty one bade
'Go ravage the realm of the robber Thingol,
and mar the magic of Melian the Queen.'

Only one was there in war greater, 395 higher in honour in the hearts of the Elves, than Túrin son of Húrin untamed in war – even the huntsman Beleg of the Hidden People, the son of the wilderness who wist no sire (to bend whose bow of the black yew-tree 400 had none the might), unmatched in knowledge
of the wood's secrets and the weary hills.
He was leader beloved of the light-armed bands,
the scouts that scoured, scorning danger,
afar o'er the fells their foemen's lairs; 405
and tales and tidings timely won them
of camps and councils, of comings and goings – all the movements of the might of Morgoth the Terrible.
Thus Túrin, who trusted to targe and sword,

who was fain of fighting with foes well seen, 410
and the banded troops of his brave comrades were snared seldom and smote unlooked-for.

Then the fame of the fights on the far marches were carried to the court of the King of Doriath, and tales of Túrin were told in his halls, 415
and how Beleg the ageless was brother-in-arms
to the black-haired boy from the beaten people.
Then the king called them to come before him ever and anon when the Orc-raids waned;
to rest them and revel, and to raise awhile 420
the secret songs of the sons of Ing.

On a time was Túrin at the table of Thingol –
there was laughter long and the loud clamour
of a countless company that quaffed the mead, amid the wine of Dor-Winion that went 425 ungrudged
in their golden goblets; and goodly meats there burdened the boards, neath the blazing torches

set high in those halls that were hewn of stone.
There mirth fell on many; there minstrels clear did sing to them songs of the city of Tûn 430 neath Tain-Gwethil, towering mountain,
where the great gods sit and gaze on the world
from the guarded shores of the gulf of Faërie.
Then one sang of the slaying at the Swanships' Haven

and the curse that had come on the kindreds 435
since:
all silent sat and soundless harkened, and waited the words save one alone –

the Man among Elves that Morwin bore.
Unheeding he heard or high feasting or lay or laughter, and looked, it seemed, 440 to a deep distance in the dark without,
and strained for sounds in the still spaces,
for voices that vanished in the veils of night.
He was lithe and lean, and his locks were wild, and woodland weeds he wore of brown 445 and grey and green, and gay jewel or golden trinket his garb knew not.

An Elf there was – Orgof – of the ancient race that was lost in the lands where the long marches from the quiet waters of Cuiviénen 450 were made in the mirk of the midworld’s gloom, ere light was lifted aloft o’er earth;
but blood of the Gnomes was blent in his veins.
He was close akin to the King of Doriath – a hardy hunter and his heart was brave, 455 but loose his laughter and light his tongue, and his pride outran his prowess in arms.
He was fain before all of fine raiment and of gems and jewels, and jealous of such as found favour before himself. 460 Now costly clad in colours gleaming he sat on a seat that was set on high near the king and queen and close to Túrin.
When those twain were at table he had taunted him oft,
lightly with laughter, for his loveless ways, 465
his haggard raiment and hair unshorn;

but Túrin untroubled neither turned his head nor wasted words on the wit of Orgof.
But this day of the feast more deep his gloom than of wont, and his words men won harder; 470 for of twelve long years the tale was full since on Morwin his mother through a maze of tears he looked the last, and the long shadows of the forest had fallen on his fading home;
and he answered few, and Orgof nought. 475
Then the fool's mirth was filled the more,
to a keener edge was his carping whetted at the clothes uncouth and the uncombéd hair of Túrin newcome from the tangled forest.
He drew forth daintily a dear treasure, 480
a comb of gold that he kept about him, and tendered it to Túrin; but he turned not his eyes, nor deigned to heed or harken to Orgof,
who too deep drunken that disdain should quell him:
'Nay, an thou knowest not thy need of comb, 485 nor its use,' quoth he, 'too young thou leftest thy mother's ministry, and 'twere meet to go that she teach thee tame thy tangled locks - if the women of Hithlum be not wild and loveless, uncouth and unkempt as their cast-off sons.' 490

Then a fierce fury, like a fire blazing,
was born of bitterness in his bruised heart;
his white wrath woke at the words of scorn for the women of Hithlum washed in tears; and a heavy horn to his hand lying, 495 with gold adorned for good drinking, of his might unmindful thus moved in ire

he seized and, swinging, swiftly flung it in the face of Orgof. 'Thou fool', he said,
 'fill thy mouth therewith, and to me no further 500 thus witless prate by wine bemused' - but his face was broken, and he fell backward, and heavy his head there hit upon the stone of the floor rock-paved mid flagons and vessels of the o'erturned table that tumbled on him 505 as clutching he fell; and carped no more, in death silent. There dumb were all at bench and board; in blank amaze they rose around him, as with ruth of heart he gazed aghast on his grievous deed, 510 on his wine-stained hand, with wondering eyes half-comprehending. On his heel then he turned into the night striding, and none stayed him;
 but some their swords half slipped from sheaths
 - they were Orgof's kin - yet for awe of 515 Thingol
 they dared not draw while the dazed king stonefaced stared on his stricken thane and no sign showed them. But the slayer weary his hands laved in the hidden stream that strikes 'fore the gates, nor stayed his 520 tears:
 'Who has cast,' he cried, 'a curse upon me;
 for all I do is ill, and an outlaw now,
 in bitter banishment and blood-guilty,
 of my fosterfather I must flee the halls, nor look on the lady beloved again' - 525 yea, his heart to Hithlum had hastened him now, but that road he dared not, lest the wrath he draw of the Elves after him, and their anger alight should speed the spears in despite of Morgoth o'er the hills of Hithlum to hunt him down; 530 lest a doom more dire than they dreaded of old be meted his mother and the Maid of Tears.

In the furthest folds of the Forest of Doriath, in the darkest dales on its drear borders, in haste he hid him, lest the hunt take him; 535 and they found not his footsteps who fared after, the thanes of Thingol; who thirty days sought him sorrowing, and searched in vain with no purpose of ill, but the pardon bearing of Thingol throned in the Thousand Caves. 540

He in council constrained the kin of Orgof to forget their grief and forgiveness show, in that wilful bitterness had barbed the words of Orgof the Elf; said 'his hour had come that his soul should seek the sad pathway 545

to the deep valley of the Dead Awaiting,
there a thousand years thrice to ponder
in the gloom of Gurthrond his grim jesting, ere he fare to Faërie to feast again.'

Yet of his own treasure he oped the gates, 550 and gifts ungrudging of gold and gems to the sons he gave of the slain; and his folk well deemed the deed. But that doom of the King

Túrin knew not, and turned against him the hands of the Elves he unhappy believed, 555 wandering the woodland woeful-hearted; for his fate would not that the folk of the caves should harbour longer Húrin's offspring.

NOTES

(Throughout the Notes statements such as 'Delimorgoth A, and B as typed' (line 11) imply that the reading in the printed text (in that case Delu-Morgoth) is a later emendation made to B).

- 8 Húrin is Úrin in the Lost Tales (and still when this poem was begun, see note to line 213), and his name Thalion 'Steadfast', found in The Silmarillion and the Narn, does not occur in them (though he is called 'the Steadfast').
- 11 Delimorgoth A, and B as typed. Morgoth occurs once only in the Lost Tales, in the typescript version of the Tale of Tinúviel (ll. 44); see note to line 20.
- 13 Nínin Udathriol A, and B as typed; this occurs in the Tale (ll. 84; for explanation of the name see ll. 346). When changing Udathriol to Unothradin my father wrote in the margin of B: 'or Nirnaithos Unothradin'.

- 17 Above Erithámrod is pencilled in A Urinthalion.
- 20 B as typed had Belcha, which was then changed through Belegor, Melegor, to Bauglir. (A has a different reading here: as a myriad rats in measureless army / might pull down the proudest ...) Belcha occurs in the typescript version of the Tale of Tinúviel (ll. 44), where Belcha Morgoth are said to be Melko's names among the Gnomes. Bauglir is found as a name of Morgoth in The Silmarillion and the Narn.
- 22 Melko's A; Belcha's B as typed, then the line changed to To the halls of Belegor (> Melegor), and finally to the reading given. See note to line 20.
- 25 Above Erithámrod in A is written UrinThalion (see note to line 17); Úrin > Húrin, and a direction to read Thalion Húrin.
- 29 Finweg's son A, and B as typed; the emendation is a later one, and at the same time my father wrote in the margin of B 'he was Fingolfin's son', clearly a comment on the change of son to heir. Finweg is Finwë Nólemë Lord of the Noldoli, who in the Lost Tales was Turgon's father (I. 115), not as he afterwards became his grandfather.

- 50 Kor > Cor A, Cor B as typed. When emending Cor to Corthûn my father wrote in the margin of B: 'Corthun or Tûn'.
- 51 Thalion A, and B as typed.
Delimorgoth A, and B as typed (as at line 11).
- 73 In B there is a mark of insertion between lines 72 and 73. This probably refers to a line in A, not taken up into B: bound by the (> my) spell of bottomless (> unbroken) might.
- 75 Belcha A, and B as typed; the same chain of emendations in B as at lines 20 and 22.
- 84 Bauglir: as at line 75.
- 105 Mavwin A, and B as typed; in B then emended to Mailwin, and back to Mavwin; Morwin written later in the margin of B. Exactly the same at 129, and at 137 though here without Morwin in the margin; at 145 Mavwin unemended, but Morwin in the margin. Thereafter Mavwin stands unemended and without marginal note, as far as 438 (see note). For consistency I read Morwin throughout the first version of the poem. – Mavwin is the form in the Tale; Mailwin does not occur elsewhere.

- 117 On the variation Nienóri/Nienor in the Tale see ll. 118–19.
- 120 Tinúviel A, Tinwiel B unemended but with Tinúviel in the margin. Tinwiel does not occur elsewhere.
- 121 Ermabwed ‘One-handed’ is Beren’s title or nickname in the Lost Tales.
- 137 Gumlin is named in the Tale (ll. 74, etc.); the younger of the two guardians of Túrin on his journey to Doriath (here called Halog) is not.
- 160 Belcha A, and B as typed, emended to Bauglir. Cf. notes to lines 20, 22, 75.
- 213 Urin > Húrin A; but Húrin A in line 216.

- 218 Nínin Udathriol A, and B as typed; cf. line 13.
- 226 The distinction between ‘Gnomes’ and ‘Elves’ is still made; see I. 43–4.
- 230 Dorwinion A.
- 306 For Mavwin was Melian moved to ruth A, and B as typed, with Then was Melian moved written in the margin. The second half-line has only three syllables unless moved is read movéd, which is not satisfactory. The second version of the poem has here For Morwen Melian was moved to ruth. Cf. lines 494, 519.
- 333 Túrin Thaliodrin A (cf. line 115), emended to the son of Thalion.
- 361 Glamhoth appears in The Fall of Gondolin (II. 160), with the translation ‘folk of dreadful hate’.
- 364 Belcha A, and B as typed; then > Melegor > Bauglir in B.
- 392 Bauglir: as at line 364.
- 408 Morgoth Belcha A, and B as typed.
- 430 Kor > Cor A, Cor B as typed. Cf. line 50.
- 431 Tengwethil A, and B as typed. In the early Gnomish dictionary and in the - Name-list to The Fall of Gondolin the Gnomish name of Taniquetil is Danigwethil (I. 266, II. 337).

- 438 Mavwin A, and B as typed, but Mavwin > Morwen a later emendation in B. I read Morwin throughout the first version of the poem (see note to line 105).
- 450 Cuinlimfin A, and B as typed; Cuiviénen a later emendation in B. The form in the Lost Tales is Koivië-Néni; Cuinlimfin occurs nowhere else.
- 461-3 These lines bracketed and marked with an X in B.
- 471 This line marked with an X in B.
- 472 Mavwin > Morwen B; see line 438.
- 494 all washed in tears A, washed in tears B (half-line of three syllables), with an X in the margin and an illegible word written in pencil before washed. Cf. lines 306, 519. The second version of the poem does not reach this point.
- 514-16 Against these lines my father wrote in the margin of B: 'Make Orgof's kin set on him and T. fight his way out.'
- 517 stonefacéd stared: the accent on stonefacéd was put in later and the line marked with an X. – In his essay On Translating Beowulf (1940; The Monsters and the Critics and Other Essays (1983) p. 67) my father gave stared stonyfaced as an example of an Old English metrical type.

519 his hands laved: the line is marked with an X in B. Cf. lines 306, 494.

528 With the half-line and their anger alight the second, more finished, part of the manuscript A begins; see p. 4.

529 Belcha A, Morgoth B as typed.

548 Guthrond A, and B as typed.

Commentary on the Prologue and Part I ‘Túrin’s Fostering’

The opening section or ‘Prologue’ of the poem derives from the opening of the Tale (II. 70–1) and in strictly narrative terms there has been little development. In lines 18–21 (and especially in the rejected line in A, as a myriad rats in measureless army / might pull down the proudest) is clearly foreshadowed the story in The Silmarillion (p. 195):

... they took him at last alive, by the command of Morgoth, for the Orcs grappled him with their hands, which clung to him though he hewed off their arms; and ever their numbers were renewed, until at last he fell buried beneath them.

On the other hand the motive in the later story for capturing him alive (Morgoth knew that Húrin had been to Gondolin) is necessarily not present, since Gondolin in the older phases of the legends was not discovered till Turgon retreated down Sirion after the Battle of Unnumbered Tears (Il. 120, 208). That he was taken alive by Morgoth's command is however already stated in the poem (line 20), though it is not explained why. In the Tale Morgoth's interest in Húrin as a tool for the discovery of Turgon arose from his knowledge that the Elves of Kôr thought little of Men, holding them in scant fear or suspicion for their blindness and lack of skill

– an idea that is repeated in the poem (46–8); but this idea seems only to have arisen in Morgoth's mind when he came to Húrin in his dungeon (44 ff.).

The place of Húrin's torment (in the Tale 'a lofty place of the mountains') is now defined as a stool of stone on the steepest peak of Thangorodrim; and this is the first occurrence of that name.

In the change of son to heir in line 29 is seen the first hint of a development in the kingly house of the Noldoli, with the appearance of a second generation between Finwë (Finweg) and Turgon; but by the time that my father pencilled this change on the text (and noted 'He was Fingolfin's son') the later genealogical structure was already in being, and this is as it were a casual indication of it.

In 'Túrin's Fostering' there is a close relationship between the Tale and the poem, extending to many close similarities of wording – especially abundant in the scene in Thingol's hall leading to the death of Orgof; and some phrases had a long life, surviving from the Tale, through the poem, and into the Narn i Hîn Húrin, as rather would she dwell poor among Men than live sweetly as an almsguest among the woodland Elves (Il. 73)

but to spend her days
as alms-guest of others, even Elfin kings, it liked her little (284-6)

she would not yet humble her pride to be an alms-guest, not even of a king
(Narn p. 70)

- though in the Narn the 'alms-guest' passage occurs at a different point, before Túrin left Hithlum (Morwen's hope that Húrin would come back is in the Narn her reason for not journeying to Doriath with her son, not for refusing the later invitation to her to go).

Of Morwen's situation in Dor-lómin after the Battle of Unnumbered Tears there are a few things to say. In the poem (111-13) men unmindful of his mighty lordship

dwelt in Dorlómin and dealt unkindly
with his widowed wife

- echoing the Tale: 'the strange men who dwelt nigh knew not the dignity of the Lady Mavwin', but there is still no indication of who these men were or where they came from (see Il. 126). As so often, the narrative situation was prepared but its explanation had not emerged. The unclarity of the Tale as to where Úrin dwelt before the great Battle (see Il. 120) is no longer present: the dwelling was dear where he dwelt of old (288). Nienor was born before Túrin left (on the contradiction in the Tale on this point see Il. 131); and the chronology of Túrin's childhood is still that of the Tale (see Il. 142): seven years old when he left Hithlum (332), seven years in Doriath while tidings still came from Morwen (333), twelve years since he came to Doriath when he slew Orgof (471). In the later story the last figure remained unchanged, which suggests that the X (mark of dissatisfaction) placed against line 471 had some other reason.

There are several references in the poem to Húrin and Beren having been friends and fellows-in-arms (122-4, 248-9, 298). In the Tale it was said originally (when Beren was a Man) that Egnor Beren's father was akin to Mavwin; this was replaced by a different passage (when Beren had become a Gnome) according to which Egnor was a friend of Úrin ('and Beren Ermabwed son of Egnor he knew'); see ll. 71-2, 139. In the later version of the Tale of Tinúviel (ll. 44) Úrin is named as the 'brother in arms' of Egnor; this was emended to make Úrin's relationship with Beren himself – as in the poem. In The Silmarillion (p. 198) Morwen thought to send Túrin to Thingol 'for Beren son of Barahir was her father's kinsman, and he had been moreover a friend of Húrin, ere evil befell'. There is no mention of the fact in the Narn (p. 63): Morwen merely says: 'Am I not now kin of the king [Thingol]? For Beren son of Barahir was grandson of Bregor, as was my father also.'

That Beren was still an Elf, not a Man, (deducible on other grounds) is apparent from lines 178-9:

and never ere now for need or wonder
had children of Men chosen that pathway

– cf. the Tale (ll. 72): 'and Túrin son of Úrin was the first of Men to tread that way', changed from the earlier reading 'and Beren Ermabwed was the first of Men ...'

In the parting of Túrin from his mother comparison with the Tale will show some subtle differences which need not be spelled out here. The younger of Túrin's guardians is now named, Halog (and it is said that Gumlin and Halog were the only 'henchmen' left to Morwen).

Some very curious things are said of Beleg in the poem. He is twice (200, 399) called 'a (the) son of the wilderness who wist no sire', and at line 416 he is 'Beleg the ageless'. There seems to be a mystery about him, an otherness that sets him apart (as he set himself apart, 195) from the Elves of Thingol's lordship (see further p. 127). It may be that there is still a trace of this in the 1930 'Silmarillion', where it is said that none went from Doriath to the Battle of Unnumbered Tears save Mablung, and Beleg 'who obeyed no man' (in the later text this becomes 'nor any out of Doriath save Mablung and Beleg, who were unwilling to have no part in these great deeds. To them Thingol gave leave to go ...'; The Silmarillion p. 189). In the poem (219) Beleg says expressly that he did not go to the great Battle. - His great bow of black yew-wood (so in The Silmarillion, p. 208, where it is named Belthroning) now appears (400): in the Tale he is not particularly marked out as a bowman (ll. 123).

Beleg's The gods have guided you (215) and Turin's guardians' thought the gods are good (244) accord with references in the Lost Tales to the influence of the Valar on Men and Elves in the Great Lands: see ll. 141.

The potent wine that Beleg carried and gave to the travellers from his flask (223 ff.) is notable - brought from the burning South and by long ways carried to the lands of the North - as is the name of the land from which it came: Dor-Winion (230, 425). The only other places in my father's writings where this name occurs (so far as I know) are in The Hobbit, Chapter IX Barrels out of Bond: 'the heady vintage of the great gardens of Dorwinion', and 'the wine of Dorwinion brings deep and pleasant dreams'.* See further p. 127.

The curious element in Thingol's message to Morwen in the Tale, explaining why he did not go with his people to the Battle of Unnumbered Tears (ll. 73), has now been rejected; but with Morwen's response to the messengers out of Doriath there enters the legend the Dragon-helm of Dor-lómin (297 ff.). As yet little is told of it (though more is said in the second version of the poem, see p. 126): Húrin often bore it in battle (in the Narn it is denied that he used it, p. 76); it magically protected its wearer (as still in the Narn, p. 75); and it was with that token crowned of the towering dragon, and o'erwritten with runes by wrights of old (cf. the Narn: 'on it were graven runes of victory'). But nothing is here said of how Húrin came by it, beyond the fact that it was his heirloom. Very notable is the passage (307 ff.) in which is described Thingol's handling of the helm as his hoard were scant, despite his possession of dungeons filled / with Elfin armouries of ancient gear. I have commented previously (see II. 128-9, 245-6) on the early emphasis on the poverty of Tinwelint (Thingol): here we have the first appearance of the idea of his wealth (present also at the beginning of the Lay of Leithian). Also notable is the close echoing of the lines of the poem in the words of the Narn, p. 76:

Yet Thingol handled the Helm of Hador as though his hoard were scanty, and he spoke courteous words, saying: 'Proud were the head that bore this helm, which the sires of Húrin bore.'

There is also a clear echo of lines 315-18

Then a thought was thrust into Thingol's heart,
and Túrin he called and told when come
that Morwin his mother a mighty thing
had sent to her son, his sire's heirloom

in the prose of the Narn:

Then a thought came to him, and he summoned Túrin, and told him that Morwen had sent to her son a mighty thing, the heirloom of his fathers.

Compare also the passages that follow in both works, concerning Túrin's being too young to lift the Helm, and being in any case too unhappy to heed it on account of his mother's refusal to leave Hithlum. This was the first of his sorrows (328); in the Narn (p. 75) the second.

The account of Túrin's character in boyhood (341 ff.) is very close to that in the Tale (ll. 74), which as I have noted before (ll. 121) survived into the Narn (p. 77): the latter account indeed echoes the poem ('he learned much lore', 'neither did he win friendship easily'). In the poem it is now added that in weaving song / he had a minstrel's mastery, but mirth was not in it.

An important new element in the narrative enters with the companionship of Beleg and Túrin (wearing the Dragon-helm, 377) in warfare on the marches of Doriath:

how Beleg the ageless was brother-in-arms
to the black-haired boy from the beaten people.
(416-17)

Of this there is no mention in the Tale at all (ll. 74). Cf. my Commentary, ll. 122:

Túrin's prowess against the Orcs during his sojourn in Artanor is given a more central or indeed unique importance in the tale ('he held the wrath of Melko from them for many years'), especially as Beleg, his companion-in-arms in the later versions, is not here mentioned.

In the poem the importance to Doriath of Túrin's warfare is not diminished, however:

for by him was holden the hand of ruin
from Thingol's folk, and Thû feared him (389-90)

We meet here for the first time Thû, thane most mighty / neath Morgoth Bauglir. It is interesting to learn that Thû knew of Túrin and feared him, also that Morgoth ordered Thû to assault Doriath: this story will reappear in the Lay of Leithian.

In the story of Túrin and Orgof the verses are very clearly following the prose of the Tale, and there are many close likenesses of wording, as already noted. The relation of this scene to the later story has been discussed previously (II. 121-2). Orgof still has Gnome-blood, which may imply the continuance of the story that there were Gnomes among Thingol's people (see II. 43). The occasion of Túrin's return from the forest to the Thousand Caves (a name that first occurs in the poem) becomes, as it seems, a great feast, with songs of Valinor – quite unlike the later story, where the occasion is in no way marked out and Thingol and Melian were not in Menegroth (Narn p. 79); and Túrin and Orgof were set on high / near the king and queen (i.e. presumably on the dais, at the 'high table'). Whether it was a rejection of this idea that caused my father to bracket lines 461-3 and mark them with an X I cannot say. The secret songs of the sons of Ing referred to in this passage (421) are not indeed songs of the sons of Ing of the Ælfwine history (II. 301 ff.); this Ing is the Gnomish form of Ingwë, Lord of the First Kindred of the Elves (earlier Inwë Lord of the Teleri).*

The lines concerning Orgof dead are noteworthy:

his hour had come
that his soul should seek the sad pathway
to the deep valley of the Dead Awaiting,
there a thousand years thrice to ponder
in the gloom of Gurthronð his grim jesting, ere he fare to Faërie to feast again.

(544-9)

With this compare the tale of The Coming of the Valar and the Building of Valinor (l. 76):

There [in the hall of Vê] Mandos spake their doom, and there they waited in the darkness, dreaming of their past deeds, until such time as he appointed when they might again be born into their children, and go forth to laugh and sing again.

The name *Gurthron*d (< *Guthron*d) occurs nowhere else; the first element is doubtless gurth 'death', as in the name of Túrin's sword Gurtholfin (ll. 342).

There remain a few particular points concerning names. At line 366 Hithlum is explained as the name of Dorlómin among Men:

of dark Dorlómin with its dreary pines
that Hithlum unhappy is hight by Men.

This is curious. In the Lost Tales the name of the land among Men was Aryador; so in the Tale of Turambar (ll. 70):

In those days my folk dwelt in a vale of Hisilómë and that land did Men name Aryador in the tongues they then used.

In the 1930 'Silmarillion' it is specifically stated that Hithlum and Dorlómin were Gnomish names for Hisilómë, and there seems every reason to suppose that this was always the case. The answer to the puzzle may however lie in the same passage of the Tale of Turambar, where it is said that often was the story of Turambar and the Foalókë in their [i.e. Men's] mouths – but rather after the fashion of the Gnomes did they say Turumart and the Fuithlug.

Perhaps then the meaning of line 366 is that Men called Hisilómë Hithlum because they used the Gnomish name, not that it was the name in their own tongue.

In the following lines (367–8)

the Shadowy Mountains fenced them from Faërie and the folk of the wood.

This is the first occurrence of the name Shadowy Mountains, and it is used as it was afterwards (Ered Wethrin); in the Lost Tales the mountains forming the southern fence of Hithlum are called the Iron Mountains or the Bitter Hills (see II. 61).

The name Cuinlimfin of the Waters of Awakening (note to line 450) seems to have been a passing idea, soon abandoned.

Lastly, at line 50 occurs (by emendation in B from Côr) the unique compound name Corthûn, while at 430 the city of Côr was emended to the city of Tûn; see II. 292.

II

BELEG

Long time alone he lived in the hills a hunter of beast and hater of Men, 560 or Orcs, or Elves, till outcast folk there one by one, wild and reckless around him rallied; and roaming far they were feared by both foe and friend of old.
For hot with hate was the heart of Túrin, 565 nor a friend found him such folk of Thingol as he wandering met in the wood's fastness.

There Beleg the brave on the borders of Doriath they found and fought – and few were with him – and o'erborne by numbers they bound him at 570 last,
till their captain came to their camp at eve.
Afar from that fight his fate that day had taken Túrin on the trail of the Orcs, as they hastened home to the Hills of Iron
with the loot laden of the lands of Men. 575
Then soon was him said that a servant of Thingol they had tied to a tree – and Túrin coming stared astonished on the stern visage of Beleg the brave his brother in arms, of whom he learned the lore of leaping 580 blades,

and of bended bow and barbéd shaft,
and the wild woodland's wisdom secret,
when they blent in battle the blood of their wounds.

Then Túrin's heart was turned from hate, and he bade unbind Beleg the huntsman. 585

'Now fare thou free! But, of friendship aught if thy heart yet holds for Húrin's son, never tell thou tale that Túrin thou sawst an outlaw unloved from Elves and Men, whom Thingol's thanes yet thirst to slay. 590

Betray not my trust or thy troth of yore!'
Then Beleg of the bow embraced him there – he had not fared to the feast or the fall of Orgof – there kissed him kindly comfort speaking:

'Lo! nought know I of the news thou tellest; 595 but outlawed or honoured thou ever shalt be the brother of Beleg, come bliss come woe!
Yet little me likes that thy leaping sword the life should drink of the leaguered Elves.

Are the grim Glamhoth then grown so few, 600 or the foes of Faërie feeble-hearted, that warlike Men have no work to do?
Shall the foes of Faërie be friends of Men?
Betrayest thou thy troth whom we trusted of yore?'

'Nor of arméd Orc, nor [of] Elf of the wood, 605 nor of any on earth have I honour or love, O Beleg the bowman. This band alone
I count as comrades, my kindred in woe and friendless fate – our foes the world.'

‘Let the bow of Beleg to your band be joined; 610 and swearing death to the sons of darkness let us suage our sorrow and the smart of fate!
Our valour is not vanquished, nor vain the glory that once we did win in the woods of old.’

Thus hope in the heart of Húrin’s offspring 615 awoke at those words; and them well likéd of that band the boldest, save Blodrin only – Blodrin Bor’s son, who for blood and for gold alone lusted, and little he recked whom he robbed of riches or reft of life, 620 were it Elf or Orc; but he opened not the thoughts of his heart. There throbbed the harp, where the fires flickered, and the flaming brands of pine were piled in the place of their camp;
where glad men gathered in good friendship 625
as dusk fell down on the drear woodland.
Then a song on a sudden soaring loudly – and the trees up-looming towering harkened – was raised of the Wrack of the Realm of the Gods; of the need of the Gnomes on the Narrow 630 Crossing;
of the fight at Fangros, and Fëanor’s sons’ oath unbreakable. Then up sprang Beleg:
‘That our vaunt and our vows be not vain for ever,
even such as they swore, those seven chieftains, an oath let us swear that is unchanging 635
as Tain-Gwethil’s towering mountain!’ Their blades were bared, as blood shining in the flame of the fires while they flashed and touched.

As with one man's voice the words were spoken, and the oath uttered that must unrecalled 640 abide for ever, a bond of truth and friendship in arms, and faith in peril.
 Thus war was waked in the woods once more for the foes of Faërie, and its fame widely, and the fear of that fellowship, now fared 645 abroad;
 when the horn was heard of the hunting Elves that shook the shaws and the sheer valleys.
 Blades were naked and bows twanging, and shafts from the shadows shooting wingéd, and the sons of darkness slain and 650 conquered;
 even in Angband the Orcs trembled.
 Then the word wandered down the ways of the forest
 that Túrin Thalion was returned to war;
 and Thingol heard it, and his thanes were sped to lead the lost one in love to his halls - 655 but his fate was fashioned that they found him not.
 Little gold they got in that grim warfare,
 but weary watches and wounds for guerdon;
 nor on robber-raids now rode they ever,
 who fended from Faërie the fiends of Hell. 660
 But Blodrin Bor's son for booty lusted, for the loud laughter of the lawless days,
 and meats unmeasured, and mead-goblets refilled and filled, and the flagons of wine that went as water in their wild revels. 665
 Now tales have told that trapped as a child
 he was dragged by the Dwarves to their deep mansions,

 and in Nogrod nurtured, and in nought was like,
 spite blood and birth, to the blissful Elves.
 His heart hated Húrin's offspring 670 and the Bowman Beleg; so bidding his while he fled their fellowship and forest hidings to the merciless Orcs, whose moon-pallid cruel-curved blades to kill spare not;
 than whose greed for gold none greater burns 675 save in hungry hearts of the hell-dragons.
 He betrayed his troth; traitor made him and the forest fastness of his fellows in arms he opened to the Orcs, nor his oath heeded.
 There they fought and fell by foes 680 outnumbered,
 by treachery trapped at a time of night when their fires faded and few were waking – some wakened never, not for wild noises, nor cries nor curses, nor clashing steel, swept as they slumbered to the slades of 685 death.
 But Túrin they took, though towering mighty at the Huntsman's hand he hewed his foemen, as a bear at bay mid bellowing hounds, unheeding his hurts; at the hest of Morgoth yet living they lapped him, his limbs 690 entwining,
 with hairy hands and hideous arms.
 Then Beleg was buried in the bodies of the fallen,
 as sorely wounded he swooned away;
 and all was over, and the Orcs triumphed.
 The dawn over Doriath dimly kindled 695 saw Blodrin Bor's son by a beech standing with throat thirléd by a thrusting arrow, whose shaven shaft, shod with poison,

and feather-wingéd, was fast in the tree.
He bargained the blood of his brothers for gold: 700

thus his meed was meted – in the mirk at random by an orc-arrow his oath came home.

From the magic mazes of Melian the Queen they haled unhappy Húrin's offspring, lest he flee his fate; but they fared slowly 705 and the leagues were long of their laboured way over hill and hollow to the high places, where the peaks and pinnacles of pitiless stone looming up lofty are lapped in cloud, and veiled in vapours vast and sable; 710 where Eiglir Engrin, the Iron Hills, lie o'er the hopeless halls of Hell upreared wrought at the roots of the roaring cliffs of Thangorodrim's thunderous mountain.
Thither led they laden with loot and evil; 715
but Beleg yet breathed in blood drenchéd aswoon, till the sun to the South hastened, and the eye of day was opened wide.

Then he woke and wondered, and weeping took him,
and to Túrin Thalion his thoughts were turned, 720
that o'erborne in battle and bound he had seen.
Then he crawled from the corpses that had covered him over,
weary, wounded, too weak to stand.

So Thingol's thanes athirst and bleeding in the forest found him: his fate willed not 725 that he should drink the draught of death from foes.
Thus they bore him back in bitter torment his tidings to tell in the torchlit halls of Thingol the king; in the Thousand Caves to be healéd whole by the hands enchanted 730 of Melian Mablui, the moonlit queen.

Ere a week was outworn his wounds were cured, but his heart's heaviness those hands of snow nor soothed nor softened, and sorrow-laden he fared to the forest. No fellows sought he 735 in his hopeless hazard, but in haste alone he followed the feet of the foes of Elfland, the dread daring, and the dire anguish, that held the hearts of Hithlum's men and Doriath's doughtiest in a dream of fear. 740 Unmatched among Men, or magic-wielding Elves, or hunters of the Orc-kindred, or beasts of prey for blood pining, was his craft and cunning, that cold and dead an unseen slot could scent o'er stone, 745 foot-prints could find on forest pathways that lightly on the leaves were laid in moons long waned, and washed by windy rains.
The grim Glamhoth's goblin armies go cunning-footed, but his craft failed not 750 to tread their trail, till the lands were darkened, and the light was lost in lands unknown.
Never-dawning night was netted clinging
in the black branches of the beetling trees;

oppressed by pungent pinewood's odours,	755
and drowsed with dreams as the darkness thickened, he strayed steerless. The stars were hid, and the moon mantled. There magic foundered in the gathering glooms, there goblins even (whose deep eyes drill the darkest shadows)	760
bewildered wandered, who the way forsook to grope in the glades, there greyly loomed of girth unguessed in growth of ages the topless trunks of trees enchanted.
That fathomless fold by folk of Elfland	765 is Taur-na-Fuin, the Trackless Forest of Deadly Nightshade, dreadly naméd.
Abandoned, beaten, there Beleg lying to the wind harkened winding, moaning in bending boughs; to branches creaking	770 up high over head, where huge pinions of the pluméd pine-trees complained darkly in black foreboding. There bowed hopeless, in wit wildered, and wooing death, he saw on a sudden a slender sheen	775 shine a-shimmering in the shades afar, like a glow-worm's lamp a-gleaming dim.
He marvelled what it might be as he moved softly; for he knew not the Gnomes of need delving in the deep dungeons of dark Morgoth.	780
Unmatched their magic in metal-working, who jewels and gems that rejoiced the Gods aforetime fashioned, when they freedom held, now swinking slaves of ceaseless labour in Angband's smithies, nor ever were suffered	785 to wander away, warded always.

But little lanterns of lucent crystal and silver cold with subtlest cunning they strangely fashioned, and steadfast a flame burnt unblinking there blue and pale, 790 unquenched for ever. The craft that lit them was the jewel-makers' most jealous secret.
Not Morgoth's might, nor meed nor torment them vowed, availed to reveal that lore;
yet lights and lamps of living radiance, 795
many and magical, they made for him.
No dark could dim them the deeps wandering;
whose lode they lit was lost seldom in groundless grot, or gulfs far under.

'Twas a Gnome he beheld on the heaped 800 needles
of a pine-tree pillowed, when peering wary he crept closer. The covering pelt was loosed from the lamp of living radiance by his side shining. Slumber-shrouded his fear-worn face was fallen in shade. 805 Lest in webs woven of unwaking sleep, spun round by spells in those spaces dark,
he lie forlorn and lost for ever, the Hunter hailed him in the hushed forest – to the drowsy deeps of his dream profound 810 fear ever-following came falling loud;
as the lancing lightning he leapt to his feet full deeming that dread and death were upon him, Flinding go-Fuilin fleeing in anguish from the mines of Morgoth. Marvelling he 815 heard

 the ancient tongue of the Elves of Tûn;
 and Beleg the Bowman embraced him there,
 and learnt his lineage and luckless fate,
 how thrust to thralldom in a throng of captives, from the kindred carried and the cavernous 820 halls
 of the Gnomes renowned of Nargothrond, long years he laboured under lashes and flails of the baleful Balrogs, abiding his time.
 A tale he unfolded of terrible flight o'er flaming fell and fuming hollow, 825 o'er the parchéd dunes of the Plains of Drouth, till his heart took hope and his heed was less.
 'Then Taur-na-Fuin entangled my feet in its mazes enmeshed; and madness took me that I wandered witless, unwary stumbling 830 and beating the boles of the brooding pines in idle anger – and the Orcs heard me.
 They were camped in a clearing, that close at hand by mercy I missed. Their marching road is beaten broad through the black shadows 835 by wizardry warded from wandering Elves;
 but dread they know of the Deadly Nightshade, and in haste only do they hie that way.
 Now cruel cries and clamorous voices awoke in the wood, and winged arrows 840 from horny bows hummed about me;
 and following feet, fleet and stealthy, were padding and pattering on the pine-needles;
 and hairy hands and hungry fingers in the glooms groping, as I grovelled fainting 845 till they cowering found me. Fast they clutched me beaten and bleeding, and broken in spirit they laughing led me, my lagging footsteps with their spears speeding. Their spoils were piled, and countless captives in that camp were 850 chained,

and Elfin maids their anguish mourning.
But one they watched, warded sleepless, was stern-visaged, strong, and in stature tall as are Hithlum's men of the misty hills.

Full length he lay and lashed to pickets 855 in baleful bonds, yet bold-hearted his mouth no mercy of Morgoth sued, but defied his foes. Foully they smote him.

Then he called, as clear as cry of hunter that hails his hounds in hollow places, 860 on the name renowned of that noblest king – but men unmindful remember him little –

Húrin Thalion, who Erithámrod hight, the Unbending, for Orc and Balrog and Morgoth's might on the mountain yet 865 he defies fearless, on a fangéd peak of thunder-riven Thangorodrim.'

In eager anger then up sprang Beleg, crying and calling, careless of Flinding:
'O Túrin, Túrin, my troth-brother, 870 to the brazen bonds shall I abandon thee, and the darkling doors of the Deepes of Hell?'

'Thou wilt join his journey to the jaws of sorrow, O bowman crazéd, if thy bellowing cry to the Orcs should come; their ears than cats' 875 are keener whetted, and though the camp from here be a day distant where those deeds I saw, who knows if the Gnome they now pursue that crept from their clutches, as a crawling worm on belly cowering, whom they bleeding cast 880 in deathly swoon on the dung and slough of their loathsome lair. O Light of Valinor! and ye glorious Gods! How gleam their eyes, and their tongues are red!' 'Yet I Túrin will wrest from their hungry hands, or to Hell be 885 dragged,

 or sleep with the slain in the slades of Death.
 Thy lamp shall lead us, and my lore rekindle and wise wood-craft!' 'O witless hunter, thy words are wild – wolves unsleeping and wizardry ward their woeful captives; 890 unerring their arrows; the icy steel of their curvéd blades cleaves unblunted the meshes of mail; the mirk to pierce those eyes are able; their awful laughter the flesh freezes! I fare not thither, 895 for fear fetters me in the Forest of Night:
 better die in the dark dazed, forwandered,
 than wilfully woo that woe and anguish!
 I know not the way.' 'Are the knees then weak of Flinding go-Fuilin? Shall free-born Gnome 900 thus show himself a shrinking slave, who twice entrapped has twice escaped?
 Remember the might and the mirth of yore,
 the renown of the Gnomes of Nargothrond!'

Thus Beleg the Bowman quoth bold-hearted, 905 but Flinding fought the fear of his heart, and loosed the light of his lamp of blue, now brighter burning. In the black mazes enwound they wandered, weary searching;
by the tall tree-boles towering silent 910 oft barred and baffled; blindly stumbling over rock-fast roots writhing coiled;
and drowsed with dreams by the dark odours, till hope was hidden. 'Hark thee, Flinding; viewless voices vague and distant, 915 a muffled murmur of marching feet that are shod with stealth shakes the stillness.'

'No noise I hear', the Gnome answered,
'thy hope cheats thee.' 'I hear the chains clinking, creaking, the cords straining, 920 and wolves padding on worn pathways.
I smell the blood that is smeared on blades that are cruel and crooked; the croaking laughter - now, listen! louder and louder comes,' the hunter said. 'I hear no sound', 925 quoth Flinding fearful. 'Then follow after!'
with bended bow then Beleg answered,
'my cunning rekindles, my craft needs not thy lamp's leading.' Leaping swiftly he shrank in the shadows; with shrouded 930 lantern

Flinding followed him, and the forest-darkness and drowsy dimness drifted slowly unfolding from them in fleeing shadows, and its magic was minished, till they marvelling saw they were brought to its borders. There black-	935 gaping

an archway opened. By ancient trunks it was framed darkly, that in far-off days the lightning felled, now leaning gaunt their lichen-leprous limbs uprooted.
There shadowy bats that shrilled thinly	940 flew in and flew out the air brushing as they swerved soundless. A swooning light faint filtered in, for facing North they looked o'er the leagues of the lands of mourning,
o'er the bleak boulders, o'er the blistered	945 dunes
and dusty drouth of Dor-na-Fauglith;
o'er that Thirsty Plain, to the threatening peaks, now glimpséd grey through the grim archway,
of the marching might of the Mountains of Iron,
and faint and far in the flickering dusk	950
the thunderous towers of Thangorodrim.
But backward broad through the black shadows from that darkling door dimly wandered the ancient Orc-road; and even as they gazed the silence suddenly with sounds of dread	955 was shaken behind them, and shivering echoes from afar came fleeting. Feet were tramping; trappings tinkling; and the troublous murmur of viewless voices in the vaulted gloom came near and nearer. 'Ah! now I hear',	960 said Flinding fearful; 'flee we swiftly from hate and horror and hideous faces, from fiery eyes and feet relentless!

Ah! woe that I wandered thus witless hither!’

Then beat in his breast, foreboding evil, 965 with dread unwonted the dauntless heart of Beleg the brave. With blanchéd cheeks in faded fern and the feathery leaves of brown bracken they buried them deep, where dank and dark a ditch was cloven 970

on the wood’s borders by waters oozing, dripping down to die in the drouth below.
Yet hardly were they hid when a host to view round a dark turning in the dusky shadows came swinging sudden with a swift thudding 975 of feet after feet on fallen leaves.

In rank on rank of ruthless spears that war-host went; weary stumbling countless captives, cruelly laden with bloodstained booty, in bonds of iron 980 they haled behind them, and held in ward
by the wolf-riders and the wolves of Hell.

Their road of ruin was a-reek with tears:
many a hall and homestead, many a hidden refuge of Gnomish lords by night beleaguered 985 their o’ermastering might of mirth bereft, and fair things fouled, and fields curdled with the bravest blood of the beaten people.

To an army of war was the Orc-band waxen that Blodrin Bor’s son to his bane guided 990 to the wood-marches, by the welded hosts homeward hurrying to the halls of mourning swiftly swollen to a sweeping plague.

Like a throbbing thunder in the threatening deeps of cavernous clouds o'ercast with gloom	995
now swelled on a sudden a song most dire, and their hellward hymn their home greeted;
flung from the foremost of the fierce spearmen, who viewed mid vapours vast and sable
the threefold peaks of Thangorodrim,	1000
it rolled rearward, rumbling darkly, like drums in distant dungeons empty.
Then a werewolf howled; a word was shouted like steel on stone; and stiffly raised their spears and swords sprang up thickly	1005
as the wild wheatfields of the wargod's realm with points that palely pricked the twilight.
As by wind wafted then waved they all,
and bowed, as the bands with beating measured moved on mirthless from the mirky woods,	1010
from the topless trunks of Taur-na-Fuin, neath the leprous limbs of the leaning gate.
Then Beleg the Bowman in bracken cowering, on the loathly legions through the leaves peering, saw Túrin the tall as he tottered forward	1015 neath the whips of the Orcs as they whistled o'er
him;
and rage arose in his wrathful heart,
and piercing pity outpoured his tears.
The hymn was hushed; the host vanished down the hellward slopes of the hill beyond;	1020 and silence sank slow and gloomy round the trunks of the trees of Taur-na-Fuin, and nethermost night drew near outside.

‘Follow me, Flinding, from the forest curséd!
Let us haste to his help, to Hell if need be 1025 or to death by the darts of the dread Glamhoth!’:
and Beleg bounded from the bracken madly, like a deer driven by dogs baying from his hiding in the hills and hollow places;
and Flinding followed fearful after him 1030 neath the yawning gate, through yew-thickets, through bogs and bents and bushes shrunk, till they reached the rocks and the riven moorlands and friendless fells falling darkly to the dusty dunes of Dor-na-Faughlith. 1035
In a cup outcarven on the cold hillside, whose broken brink was bleakly fringed with bended bushes bowed in anguish from the North-wind’s knife, beneath them far the feasting camp of their foes was laid; 1040
the fiery flare of fuming torches, and black bodies in the blaze they saw crossing countless, and cries they heard and the hollow howling of hungry wolves.

Then a moon mounted o’er the mists riding, 1045 and the keen radiance of the cold moonshine the shadows sharpened in the sheer hollows, and slashed the slopes with slanting blackness;
in wreaths uprising the reek of fires was touched to tremulous trails of silver. 1050
Then the fires faded, and their foemen slumbered in a sleep of surfeit. No sentinel watched, nor guards them girdled – what good were it to watch wakeful in those withered regions gazed unclosing from the gates of Hell?

Did not werewolves' eyes unwinking gleam in the wan moonlight – the wolves that sleep not,
that sit in circles with slavering tongues round camp or clearing of the cruel Glamhoth?

that Beleg the Bowman now bore alone.
No arrows of the Orcs so unerring wingéd as his shaven shafts that could shoot to a mark that was seen but in glance ere gloom seized it.
Then Dailir he drew, his dart beloved; 1080 howso far fared it, or fell unnoted, unsought he found it with sound feathers and barbs unbroken (till it broke at last);

and fleet bade he fly that feather-pinioned snaketongué shaft, as he snicked the string 1085 in the notch nimbly, and with naked arm to his ear drew it. The air whistled, and the tingling string twanged behind it, soundless a sentinel sank before it – there was one of the wolves that awaked no 1090 more.

Now arrows after he aimed swiftly that missed not their mark and meted silent death in the darkness dreadly stinging, till three of the wolves with throats pierced,
and four had fallen with fleet-wingéd 1095 arrows a-quivering in their quenched eyes.

Then great was the gap in the guard opened,
and Beleg his bow unbent, and said:
'Wilt come to the camp, comrade Flinding, or await me watchful? If woe betide 1100 thou might win with word through the woods homeward

to Thingol the king how throve my quest, how Túrin the tall was trapped by fate, how Beleg the bowman to his bane hasted.'

Then Flinding fiercely, though fear shook him: 1105
'I have followed thee far, O forest-walker, nor will leave thee now our league denying!'

Then both bow and sword Beleg left there with his belt unbound in the bushes tangled of a dark thicket in a dell nigh them, 1110 and Flinding there laid his flickering lamp and his nailed shoes, and his knife only he kept, that uncumbered he might creep silent.

that at waist he wore awake or sleeping, whose edge would eat through iron noiseless 1145
as a clod of clay is cleft by the share.

It was wrought by wrights in the realms of the East,
in black Belegost, by the bearded Dwarves of troth unmindful; it betrayed him now from its sheath slipping as o'er shaggy slades 1150 and roughhewn rocks their road they wended.

‘We must bear him back as best we may,’
said Beleg, bending his broad shoulders.
Then the head he lifted of Húrin’s offspring, and Flinding go-Fuilin the feet clasped; 1155 and doughty that deed, for in days long gone though Men were of mould less mighty build ere the earth’s goodness from the Elves they drew, though the Elfin kindreds ere old was the sun were of might unminished, nor the moon 1160 haunted

faintly fading as formed of shadows in places unpeopled, yet peers they were not in bone and flesh and body's fashioning, and Túrin was tallest of the ten races that in Hithlum's hills their homes builded. 1165

Like a log they lifted his limbs mighty, and straining staggered with stealth and fear,
with bodies bending and bones aching,
from the cruel dreaming of the camp of dread, where spearmen drowsed sprawling drunken 1170
by their moon-blades keen with murder whetted mid their shaven shafts in sheaves piled.

Now Beleg the brave backward led them, but his foot fumbled and he fell thudding with Túrin atop of him, and trembling stumbled

1175

Flinding forward; there frozen lying long while they listened for alarm stirring, for hue and cry, and their hearts cowered;
but unbroken the breathing of the bands sleeping, as darkness deepened to dead midnight, 1180

and the lifeless hour when the loosened soul oft sheds the shackles of the shivering flesh.
Then dared their dread to draw its breath,
and they found their feet in the fouléd earth, and bent they both their backs once more to their task of toil, for Túrin woke not.

There the huntsman's hand was hurt deeply,
as he groped on the ground, by a gleaming point -
'twas Dailir his dart dearly prizéd he had found by his foot in fragments twain, 1190 and with barbs bended: it broke at last neath his body falling. It boded ill.

As in dim dreaming, and dazed with horror,
they won their way with weary slowness, foot by footstep, till fate them granted 1195

the leaguer at last of those lairs to pass, and their burden laid they, breathless gasping, on bare-bosméd earth, and abode a while,
ere by winding ways they won their path up the slanting slopes with silent labour, 1200 with spended strength sprawling to cast them in the darkling dell neath the deep thicket.

Then sought his sword, and songs of magic o'er its eager edge with Elfin voice there Beleg murmured, while bluely glimmered 1205

the lamp of Flinding neath the lacéd thorns.
There wondrous wove he words of sharpness, and the names of knives and Gnomish blades he uttered o'er it: even Ogbar's spear and the glaive of Gaurin whose gleaming stroke 1210

did rive the rocks of Rodrim's hall;
the sword of Saithnar, and the silver blades of the enchanted children of chains forged in their deep dungeon; the dirk of Nargil, the knife of the North in Nogrod smithied; 1215
the sweeping sickle of the slashing tempest, the lambent lightning's leaping falchion even Celeg Aithorn that shall cleave the world.

Then whistling whirled he the whetted sword-blade and three times three it threshed the gloom, 1220 till flame was kindled flickering strangely like licking firelight in the lamp's glimmer blue and baleful at the blade's edges.

Lo! a leering laugh lone and dreadful by the wind wafted wavered nigh them; 1225 their limbs were loosened in listening horror;
they fancied the feet of foes approaching, for the horns hearkening of the hunt afoot
in the rustling murmur of roving breezes.

Then quickly curtained with its covering pelt 1230 was the lantern's light, and leaping Beleg with his sword severed the searing bonds on wrist and arm like ropes of hemp so strong that whetting; in stupor lying entangled still lay Túrin moveless. 1235

For the feet's fetters then feeling in the dark Beleg blundering with his blade's keenness unwary wounded the weary flesh of wayworn foot, and welling blood bedewed his hand – too dark his magic: 1240

that sleep profound was sudden fathomed;
 in fear woke Túrin, and a form he guessed o'er his body bending with blade naked.
 His death or torment he deemed was come, for oft had the Orcs for evil pastime 1245 him goaded gleeful and gashed with knives that they cast with cunning, with cruel spears.

 Lo! the bonds were burst that had bound his hands:
 his cry of battle calling hoarsely he flung him fiercely on the foe he dreamed, 1250 and Beleg falling breathless earthward was crushed beneath him. Crazy with anguish then seized that sword the son of Húrin, to his hand lying by the help of doom;

 at the throat he thrust; through he pierced it, 1255

that the blood was buried in the blood-wet mould;
 ere Flinding knew what fared that night, all was over. With oath and curse he bade the goblins now guard them well, or sup on his sword: 'Lo! the son of Húrin 1260 is freed from his fetters.' His fancy wandered in the camps and clearings of the cruel Glamhoth.

 Flight he sought not at Flinding leaping with his last laughter, his life to sell amid foes imagined; but Fuilin's son 1265 there stricken with amaze, starting backward, cried: 'Magic of Morgoth! A! madness damned!

with friends thou fightest!' – then falling suddenly the lamp o'erturned in the leaves shrouded that its light released illumined pale 1270 with its flickering flame the face of Beleg.
Than the boles of the trees more breathless rooted stone-faced he stood staring frozen on that dreadful death, and his deed knowing wildeyed he gazed with waking horror, 1275 as in endless anguish an image carven.
So fearful his face that Flinding crouched and watched him, wondering what webs of doom dark, remorseless, dreadly meshed him by the might of Morgoth; and he mourned for 1280
him,
and for Beleg, who bow should bend no more,
his black yew-wood in battle twanging – his life had winged to its long waiting in the halls of the Moon o'er the hills of the sea.

Hark! he heard the horns hooting loudly, 1285
no ghostly laughter of grim phantom, no wraithlike feet rustling dimly – the Orcs were up; their ears had hearkened the cries of Túrin; their camp was tumult, their lust was alight ere the last shadows 1290 of night were lifted. Then numb with fear in hoarse whisper to unhearing ears he told his terror; for Túrin now with limbs loosened leaden-eyed was bent crouching crumpled by the corse moveless; 1295 nor sight nor sound his senses knew,

and wavering words he witless murmured,
'A! Beleg,' he whispered, 'my brother-in-arms.' Though Flinding shook him, he felt it not:
had he comprehended he had cared little. 1300 Then winds were wakened in wild dungeons where thrumming thunders throbbled and rumbled; storm came striding with streaming banners from the four corners of the fainting world; then the clouds were cloven with a crash of 1305 lightning,
and slung like stones from slings uncounted
the hurtling hail came hissing earthward, with a deluge dark of driving rain.
Now wafted high, now wavering far,
the cries of the Glamhoth called and hooted, 1310 and the howl of wolves in the heavens' roaring was mingled mournful: they missed their paths, for swollen swept there swirling torrents down the blackening slopes, and the slot was blind, so that blundering back up the beaten road 1315 to the gates of gloom many goblins wildered were drowned or drawn in Deadly Nightshade to die in the dark; while dawn came not,
while the storm-riders strove and thundered all the sunless day, and soaked and drenched 1320 Flinding go-Fuilin with fear speechless there crouched aquake; cold and lifeless lay Beleg the bowman; brooding dumbly Túrin Thalion neath the tangled thorns

sat unseeing without sound or movement. 1325

The dusty dunes of Dor-na-Fauglith hissed and spouted. Huge rose the spires of smoking vapour swathed and reeking, thick-billowing clouds from thirst unquenched, and dawn was kindled dimly lurid 1330
when a day and night had dragged away.
The Orcs had gone, their anger baffled, o'er the weltering ways weary faring to their hopeless halls in Hell's kingdom;
no thrall took they Túrin Thalion - 1335
a burden bore he than their bonds heavier, in despair fettered with spirit empty in mourning hopeless he remained behind.

NOTES

- 617 Blodrin: Bauglir A, and B as typed.
See line 618.
- 618 Bauglir Ban's son A, and B as typed (Bauglir > Blodrin carefully-made early change, Ban > Bor hasty and later). See lines 661, 696, 990.
- 631 Fangair A, Fangros B as typed.
- 636 Tengwethiel [sic] A, Tain-Gwethil B as typed. Cf. line 431.
- 653 Túrin Thaliodrin A, and B as typed.

- Cf. lines 115, 333, 720.
- 661, As at line 618.
696
- 711 Aiglir-angrin A, Aiglir Angrin B as typed, emended roughly in pencil to Eiglir Engrin; cf. line 1055. In the Tale of Turambar occurs Angorodin (the Iron Mountains), II.77.
- 711- These lines read in A (and as typed 14 in B, with of Hell is reared for of the Hells of Iron):
- where Aiglir-angrin the Iron Hills lie and Thangorodrim's thunderous mountain o'er the hopeless halls of the Hells of iron wrought at the roots of the ruthless hills.
- 718 Cf. Bilbo's second riddle to Gollum.
720 As at line 653.
- 780 Delimorgoth A, Delu-Morgoth B as typed, dark Morgoth a late pencilled emendation. At lines 11 and 51 Delu-Morgoth is an emendation of Delimorgoth in B.
- 816 Tûn also in A; see lines 50, 430.
- 818- Against these lines my father wrote 20 in the margin of B: 'Captured in battle at gates of Angband.'

- 826 o'er the black boulders of the Blasted Plain A (marked with query).
- 834 mercy: magic A, and B as typed; mercy in pencil and not quite certain.
- 946 Daideloth A emended at time of writing to Dor-na-Maiglos, Dor-na-Fauglith B as typed. In margin of A is written: 'a plateau from Dai
"high", Deloth "plain"; contrast II.
337, entry Dor-na-Dhaideloth.
- 990 Blodrin Ban's son A, and B as typed; Ban's > Bor's later in B. At lines 617–18, 661, 696 A, and B as typed, had Bauglir, changed to Blodrin in B.
- 1055 Aiglir Angrin A, and B as typed; see line 711. Bauglir A and B.
- 1098 This line is emended in B, but the reading is uncertain: apparently
Then his bow unbending Beleg asked him:
- 1137 In the margin of B is written r?, i.e.
dreadly for deadly.
- 1147 East: South A, and B as typed.
- 1198 *bosmé*d (bosomed) written thus in both A and B.

- 1214 Nargil: Loruin A, with Nargil added as an alternative.
- 1324 Túrin Thaliodrin A, and B as typed; see lines 653, 720.
- 1335 Thalion-Túrin A, and B as typed.

Commentary on Part II 'Beleg'

In this part of the poem there are some narrative developments of much interest. The poem follows the Tale (II. 76) in making Beleg become one of Túrin's band on the marches of Doriath not long after Túrin's departure from the Thousand Caves, and with no intervening event – in The Silmarillion (p. 200) Beleg came to Menegroth, and after speaking to Thingol set out to seek Túrin, while in the Narn (pp. 82–5) there is the 'trial of Túrin', and the intervention of Beleg bringing Nellas as witness, before he set out on Túrin's trail. In the poem it is explicit that Beleg was not searching for him, and indeed knew nothing whatever of what had passed in the Thousand Caves (595). But Túrin's band are no longer the 'wild spirits' of the Tale; they are hostile to all comers, whether Orcs or Men or Elves, including the Elves of Doriath (560–1, 566), as in The Silmarillion, and in far greater detail in the Narn, where the band is called Gaurwaith, the Wolf-men, 'to be feared as wolves'.

The element of Beleg's capture and maltreatment by the band now appears, and also that of Túrin's absence from the camp at the time. Several features of the story in the Narn are indeed already present in the poem, though absent from the more condensed account in The Silmarillion: as Beleg's being tied to a tree by the outlaws (577, Narn pp. 92–3), and the occasion of Túrin's absence – he was on the trail of the Orcs,

as they hastened home to the Hills of Iron
with the loot laden of the lands of Men

just as in the Narn (pp. 91-2), where however the story is part of a complex set of movements among the Woodmen of Brethil, Beleg, the Gaurwaith, and the Orcs.

Whereas in the Tale it was only now that Beleg and Túrin became companions-in-arms, we have already seen that the poem has the later story whereby they had fought together on the marches of Doriath before Túrin's flight from the Thousand Caves (p. 27); and we now have also the development that Túrin's altered mood at the sight of Beleg tied to the tree (Then Túrin's heart was turned from hate, 584), and Beleg's own reproaches (Shall the foes of Faërie be friends of Men? 603), led to the band's turning their arms henceforth only against the foes of Faërie (644). Of the great oath sworn by the members of the band, explicitly echoing that of the Sons of Fëanor (634) – and showing incidentally that in that oath the holy mountain of Taniquetil (Tain-Gwethil) was taken in witness (636), there is no trace in The Silmarillion or the Narn: in the latter, indeed, the outlaws are not conceived in such a way as to make such an oath-taking at all probable.

Lines 643 ff., describing the prowess of the fellowship in the forest, are the ultimate origin of the never finally achieved story of the Land of Dor-Cúarthol (The Silmarillion p. 205, Narn pp. 152-4); lines 651-4

even in Angband the Orcs trembled.
Then the word wandered down the ways of the forest
that Túrin Thalion was returned to war;
and Thingol heard it ...

lead in the end to

In Menegroth, and in the deep halls of Nargothrond, and even in the hidden realm of Gondolin, the fame of the deeds of the Two Captains was heard; and in Angband also they were known.

But in the later story Túrin was hidden under the name Gorthol, the Dread Helm, and it was his wearing of the Dragon-helm that revealed him to Morgoth. There is no suggestion of this in the earlier phase of the legend; the Dragon-helm makes no further appearance here in the poem.

A table may serve to clarify the development:

Tale	Lay	Silmarillion and Narn
Túrin's prowess on the marches of Doriath (Beleg not mentioned).	Túrin and Beleg companions-in-arms on the marches of Doriath; Túrin wears the Dragon-helm.	As in the poem.
Death of Orgof.	Death of Orgof.	Death of Saeros.
Túrin leaves Doriath; a band forms round him which includes Beleg.	Túrin leaves Doriath; a band of outlaws forms round him which attacks all comers.	Túrin leaves Doriath and joins a band of desperate outlaws.
	The band captures Beleg (who knows nothing of Túrin's leaving Doriath) and ties him to a tree.	The band captures Beleg (who is searching for Túrin bearing Thingol's pardon) (and ties him to a tree, Narn).

	Túrin has him set free; suffers a change of heart; Beleg joins the band; all swear an oath.	Túrin has him set free; suffers a change of heart; but Beleg will not join the band and departs. (No mention of oath.)
Great prowess of the band.	Great prowess of the band against the Orcs.	(Later Beleg returns and joins the band:) Land of Dor-Cúarthol.

Before leaving this part of the story, it may be suggested that lines 605 ff., in which Túrin declares to Beleg that This band alone / I count as comrades, contain the germ of Túrin's words to him in the Narn, p. 94:

The grace of Thingol will not stretch to receive these companions of my fall, I think; but I will not part with them now, if they do not wish to part with me, &c.

The traitor, who betrayed the band to the Orcs, now first appears. At first he is called Bauglir both in A and in B as originally typed; and it might be thought that the name had much too obviously an evil significance. The explanation is quite clearly, however, that Bauglir became Blodrin at the same time as Bauglir replaced Belcha as a name of Morgoth. (By the time my father reached line 990 Blodrin is the name as first written in both A and B; while similarly at line 1055 Bauglir is Morgoth's name, not Belcha, both in A and B as first written.) The change of Ban (father of Blodrin) to Bor was passing; he is Ban in the 1926 'Sketch of the Mythology', and so remained until, much later, he disappeared.

Blodrin's origin is interesting:

trapped as a child
he was dragged by the Dwarves to their deep
mansions,

and in Nogrod nurtured, and in nought was like,
spite blood and birth, to the blissful Elves.

(666-9)

Thus Blodrin's evil nature is explicitly ascribed to the influence of the bearded Dwarves / of troth unmindful (1148-9); and Blodrin follows Ufedhin of the Tale of the Nauglafring as an example of the sinister effect of Elvish association with Dwarves - not altogether absent in the tale of Eöl and Maeglin as it appears in The Silmarillion. Though the nature - and name - of the traitor in Túrin's band went through Protean mutations afterwards, it is not inconceivable that recollection of the Dwarvish element in Blodrin's history played some part in the emergence of Mîm in this rôle. On the early hostile view of the Dwarves see Il. 247. The words of the poem just cited arise from the 'betrayal' of Flinding by his dwarvish knife, which slipped from its sheath; so later, in the Lay of Leithian, when Beren attempted to cut a second Silmaril from the Iron Crown (lines 4160-2)

The dwarvish steel of cunning blade
by treacherous smiths of Nogrod made snapped ...

The idea expressed in the Tale (Il. 76) that Túrin was taken alive by Morgoth's command 'lest he cheat the doom that was devised for him' reappears in the poem: lest he flee his fate (705).

The rest of the story as told in the poem differs only in detail from that in the Tale. The survival of Beleg in the attack by Orcs and his swift recovery from his grievous wounds (Il. 77), present in much changed circumstances in The Silmarillion (p. 206), is here made perhaps more comprehensible, in that Elves from Doriath, who were searching for Túrin (654-5), found Beleg and took him back to be healed by Melian in the Thousand Caves (727-31). In the account of Beleg's meeting with Flinding in Taur-na-Fuin, led to him by his blue lamp, the poem is following the Tale very closely.* My father's painting of the scene (Pictures by J. R. R. Tolkien no. 37) was almost certainly made a few years later, when the Elf lying under the tree was still called Flinding son of Fuilin (in the Tale bo-Dhuilin, earlier go-Dhuilin, son of Duilin; the patronymic prefix has in the poem (814, 900) reverted to the earlier form go-, see ll. 119).

In the Tale it is only said (ll. 81) that Flinding was of the people of the Rodothlim 'before the Orcs captured him'; from the poem (819-21) it seems that he was carried off, with many others, from Nargothrond, but this can scarcely be the meaning, since nought yet knew they [the Orcs] of Nargothrond (1578). The marginal note in B against these lines 'Captured in battle at gates of Angband' refers to the later story, first appearing in the 1930 'Silmarillion'.

The poem follows the Tale in the detail of Flinding's story to Beleg, except that in the poem he was recaptured by the Orcs in Taur-na-Fuin (846 ff.) and escaped again (crept from their clutches as a crawling worm, 879), whereas in the Tale he was not recaptured but 'fled heedlessly' (ll. 79). The notable point in the Tale that Flinding 'was overjoyed to have speech with a free Noldo' reappears in the poem: Marvelling he heard / the ancient tongue of the Elves of Tûn. The detail of their encountering of the Orc-host is slightly different: in the Tale the Orcs had changed their path, in the poem it seems that Beleg and Flinding merely came more quickly than did the Orcs to the point where the Orc-road emerged from the edge of the forest. In the Tale it seems indeed that the Orcs had not left the forest when they encamped for the night: the eyes of the wolves 'shone like points of red light among the trees', and Beleg and Flinding laid Túrin down after his rescue 'in the woods at no great distance from the camp'. The cup outcarven on the cold hillside of the poem (1036), where the Orcs made their bivouac, is the 'bare dell' of The Silmarillion.

In contrast to the Tale (see p. 26) Beleg is now frequently called Beleg the bowman, his great bow (not yet named) is fully described, and his unmatched skill as an archer (1071 ff.). There is also in the poem the feature of the arrow Dailir, unfailingly found and always unharmed (1080 ff.), until it broke when Beleg fell upon it while carrying Túrin (1189–92): of this there is never a mention later. The element of Beleg's archery either arose from, or itself caused, the change in the story of the entry of Beleg and Flinding into the Orc-camp that now appears: in the Tale they merely 'crept between the wolves at a point where there was a great gap between them', whereas in the poem Beleg performed the feat of shooting seven wolves in the darkness, and only so was 'a great gap opened' (1097). But the words of the Tale, 'as the luck of the Valar had it Túrin was lying nigh', are echoed in till the Gods brought them and the craft and cunning of the keen huntsman to Túrin the tall where he tumbled lay (1130–2)

The lifting and carrying of Túrin by the two Elves, referred to in the Tale as 'a great feat', 'seeing that he was a Man and of greater stature than they' (Il. 80), is expanded in the poem (1156 ff.) into a comment on the stature of Men and Elves in the ancient time, which agrees with earlier statements on this topic (see I. 235, Il. 142, 220). The notable lines though Men were of mould less mighty builded ere the earth's goodness from the Elves they drew (1157–8)

are to be related to the statements cited in Il. 326: 'As Men's stature grows [the Elves'] diminishes', and 'ever as Men wax more powerful and numerous so the fairies fade and grow small and tenuous, filmy and transparent, but Men larger and more dense and gross'. The mention here (1164) of the ten races of Hithlum occurs nowhere else, and it is not clear whether it refers to all the peoples of Men and Elves who in one place or another in the Lost Tales are set in Hithlum, which as I have remarked 'seems to have been in danger of having too many inhabitants' (see ll. 249, 251).

The Tale has it that it was Beleg's knife that had slipped from him as he crept into the camp; in the poem it is Flinding's (1142 ff.). In the Tale Beleg returned to fetch his sword from the place where he had left it, since they could carry Túrin no further; in the poem they carried Túrin all the way up to the dark thicket in a dell whence they had set out (1110, 1202). The 'whetting spell' of Beleg over his (still unnamed) sword is an entirely new element (and without trace later); it arises in association with line 1141, No blade would bite on the bonds he wore. In style it is reminiscent of Lúthien's 'lengthening spell' in Canto V of the Lay of Leithian; but of the names in the spell, of Ogbar, Gaurin, Rodrim, Saithnar, Nargil, Celeg Aithorn, there seems to be now no other trace.

There now occurs in the poem the mysterious leering laugh (1224), to which it seems that the ghostly laughter of grim phantom in line 1286 refers, and which is mentioned again in the next part of the poem (1488-90). The narrative purpose of this is evidently to cause the covering of the lamp and to cause Beleg to work too quickly in the darkness at the cutting of the bonds. It may be also that the wounding of Beleg's hand when he put it on the point of Dailir his arrow (1187) accounts for his clumsiness; for every aspect of this powerful scene had been pondered and refined.

In the poem the great storm is introduced: first presaged in lines 1064 ff., when Beleg and Flinding were at the edge of the dell (as it is in The Silmarillion):

Lo! black cloud-drifts surged up like smoke from the sable North, and the sheen was shrouded of the shivering moon;

the wind came wailing from the woeful
mountains,
and the heath unhappy hissed and whispered and bursting at last after Beleg's death (1301 ff.), to last all through the following day, during which Túrin and Flinding crouched on the hillside (1320, 1330-1). On account of the storm the Orcs were unable to find Túrin, and departed, as in The Silmarillion; in the Tale Flinding roused Túrin to flee as soon as the shouts of discovery were heard from the Orc-camp, and nothing more is said of the matter. But in the poem it is still, as in the Tale, the sudden uncovering of Flinding's lamp as he fell back from Túrin's assault that illumined Beleg's face; in the last account that my father wrote of this episode he was undecided whether it was the cover falling off the lamp or a great flash of lightning that gave the light, and in the published work I chose the latter.

There remain a few isolated points, mostly concerning names. In this part of the poem we meet for the first time:

Nargothrond 821, 904;

Taur-na-Fuin (for Taur Fuin of the Lost Tales) 766, 828; called also Deadly Nightshade 767, 837, 1317, and Forest of Night 896;

Dor-na-Faughlith 946, 1035, 1326, called also the Plains of Drouth 826, the Thirsty Plain 947 (and in A, note to 826, the Blasted Plain). The name Dor-na-Faughlith arose during the composition of the poem (see note to 946). By this time the story of the blasting of the great northern plain, so that it became a dusty desert, in the battle that ended the Siege of Angband, must have been conceived, though it does not appear in writing for several years.

Here also is the first reference to the triple peaks of Thangorodrim (1000), called the thunderous towers (951), though in the 'Prologue' to the poem it is said that Húrin was set on its steepest peak (96); and from lines 713-14 (as rewritten in the B-text) we learn that Angband was wrought at the roots of the great mountain.

The name Fangros (631; Fangair A) occurs once elsewhere, in a very obscure note, where it is apparently connected with the burning of the ships of the Noldoli.

Melian's name Mablui – by the hands enchanted of Melian Mablui, 731 – clearly contains mab 'hand', as in Mablung, Ermabwed (see II. 339).

That the Dwarves were said in A and originally in B to dwell in the South (1147, emended in B to East) is perhaps to be related to the statement in the Tale of the Nauglafring that Nogrod lay 'a very long journey southward beyond the wide forest on the borders of those great heaths nigh Umboth-muilin the Pools of Twilight' (II. 225).

I cannot explain the reference in line 1006 to the wild wheatfields of the wargod's realm; nor that in the lines concerning Beleg's fate after death to the long waiting of the dead in the halls of the Moon (1284).

III

FAILIVRIN

Flinding go-Fuilin faithful-hearted the brand of Beleg with blood stained 1340 lifted with loathing from the leafy mould, and hid it in the hollow of a huge thorn-tree;
then he turned to Túrin yet tranced brooding, and softly said he: 'O son of Húrin, unhappy-hearted, what helpeth it 1345 to sit thus in sorrow's silent torment without hope or counsel?' But Húrin's son, by those words wakened, wildly answered:
'I abide by Beleg; nor bid me leave him, thou voice unfaithful. Vain are all things. 1350 O Death dark-handed, draw thou near me;
if remorse may move thee, from mourning loosed crush me conquered to his cold bosom!' Flinding answered, and fear left him for wrath and pity: 'Arouse thy pride! 1355 Not thus unthinking on Thangorodrim's heights enchained did Húrin speak.'
'Curse thy comfort! Less cold were steel.
If Death comes not to the death-craving,
I will seek him by the sword. The sword - where lies 1360 it?
O cold and cruel, where cowerest now, murderer of thy master? Amends shalt work, and slay me swift, O sleep-giver.'
'Look not, luckless, thy life to steal, nor sully anew his sword unhappy 1365 in the flesh of the friend whose freedom seeking he fell by fate, by foes unwounded.

Yea, think that amends are thine to make,
his wrongéd blade with wrath appeasing, its thirst cooling in the thrice-abhorred 1370 blood of Bauglir's baleful legions.

Is the feud achieved thy father's chains on thee laid, or lessened by this last evil?
Dream not that Morgoth will mourn thy death, or thy dirges chant the dread Glamhoth - 1375 less would like them thy living hatred and vows of vengeance; nor vain is courage, though victory seldom be valour's ending.'

Then fiercely Túrin to his feet leaping cried new-crazéd: 'Ye coward Orcs, 1380 why turn ye tail? Why tarry ye now, when the son of Húrin and the sword of Beleg in wrath await you? For wrong and woe here is vengeance ready. If ye venture it not,
I will follow your feet to the four corners 1385 of the angry earth. Have after you!'

Fainting Flinding there fought with him, and words of wisdom to his witless ears he breathless spake: 'Abide, O Túrin, for need hast thou now to nurse thy hurt, 1390 and strength to gather and strong counsel.
Who flees to fight wears not fear's token,
and vengeance delayed its vow achieves.'
The madness passed; amazed pondering neath the tangled trees sat Túrin wordless 1395 brooding blackly on bitter vengeance, till the dusk deepened on his day of waking,

and the early stars were opened pale.

Then Beleg's burial in those bleak regions did Flinding fashion; where he fell sadly 1400 he left him lying, and lightly o'er him with long labour the leaves he poured.

But Túrin tearless turning suddenly on the corse cast him, and kissed the mouth cold and open, and closed the eyes. 1405

His bow laid he black beside him, and words of parting wove about him:

'Now fare well, Beleg, to feasting long neath Tengwethil in the timeless halls where drink the Gods, neath domes golden 1410 o'er the sea shining.' His song was shaken, but the tears were dried in his tortured eyes
by the flames of anguish that filled his soul.

His mind once more was meshed in darkness as heaped they high o'er the head beloved 1415 a mound of mould and mingled leaves.

Light lay the earth on the lonely dead; heavy lay the woe on the heart that lived.
That grief was graven with grim token on his face and form, nor faded ever: 1420 and this was the third of the throes of Túrin.

Thence he wandered witless without wish or
purpose;
but for Flinding the faithful he had fared to death,
or been lost in the lands of lurking evil.

Renewed in that Gnome of Nargothrond 1425 was heart and valour by hatred wakened, that he guarded and guided his grim comrade;
with the light of his lamp he lit their ways,
and they hid by day to hasten by night,
by darkness shrouded or dim vapours. 1430

The tale tells not of their travel weary,
how roamed their road by the rim of the forest, whose beetling branches, black o'erhanging, did greedy grope with gloomy malice to ensnare their souls in silent darkness. 1435

Yet west they wandered by ways of thirst and haggard hunger, hunted often,
and hiding in holes and hollow caverns, by their fate defended. At the furthest end of Dor-na-Faeglith's dusty spaces 1440 to a mighty mound in the moon looming they came at midnight: it was crowned with mist, bedewed as by drops of drooping tears.

'A! green that hill with grass fadeless, where sleep the swords of seven kindreds, 1445
where the folk of Faërie once fell uncounted.

There was fought the field by folk naméd Nirnaith Ornoth, Unnumbered Tears.

'Twas built with the blood of the beaten people;
neath moon nor sun is it mounted ever 1450 by Man nor Elf; not Morgoth's host ever dare for dread to delve therein.'

Thus Flinding faltered, faintly stirring Túrin's heaviness, that he turned his hand toward Thangorodrim, and thrice he cursed 1455

the maker of mourning, Morgoth Bauglir.

Thence later led them their lagging footsteps o'er the slender stream of Sirion's youth; not long had he leapt a lace of silver from his shining well in those shrouded hills, 1460 the Shadowy Mountains whose sheer summits there bend humbled towards the brooding heights in mist mantled, the mountains of the North.
Here the Orcs might pass him; they else dared not o'er Sirion swim, whose swelling water 1465 through moor and marsh, mead and woodland, through caverns carven in the cold bosom of Earth far under, through empty lands and leagues untrodden, beloved of Ylmir, fleeting floweth, with fame undying 1470
in the songs of the Gnomes, to the sea at last.
Thus reached they the roots and the ruinous feet of those hoary hills that Hithlum girdle, the shaggy pinewoods of the Shadowy Mountains.
There the twain enfolded phantom twilight 1475 and dim mazes dark, unholy, in Nan Dungorthin where nameless gods have shrouded shrines in shadows secret, more old than Morgoth or the ancient lords the golden Gods of the guarded West. 1480
But the ghostly dwellers of that grey valley hindered nor hurt them, and they held their course with creeping flesh and quaking limb.
Yet laughter at whiles with lingering echo, as distant mockery of demon voices 1485
there harsh and hollow in the hushed twilight

Flinding fancied, fell, unwholesome as that leering laughter lost and dreadful that rang in the rocks in the ruthless hour of Beleg's slaughter. 'Tis Bauglir's voice 1490 that dogs us darkly with deadly scorn' he shuddering thought; but the shreds of fear and black foreboding were banished utterly when they clomb the cliffs and crumbling rocks that walled that vale of watchful evil, 1495
and southward saw the slopes of Hithlum more warm and friendly. That way they fared during the daylight o'er dale and ghyll, o'er mountain pasture, moor and boulder, over fell and fall of flashing waters 1500 that slipped down to Sirion, to swell his tide in his eastward basin onward sweeping to the South, to the sea, to his sandy delta.

After seven journeys lo! sleep took them on a night of stars when they nigh had 1505 stridden
to those lands beloved that long had known Flinding aforetime. At first morning the white arrows of the wheeling sun gazed down gladly on green hollows and smiling slopes that swept before them. 1510 There builded boles of beeches ancient marched in majesty in myriad leaves of golden russet greyly rooted,
in leaves translucent lightly robéd;
their boughs up-bending blown at morning 1515
by the wings of winds that wandered down o'er blossomy bent breathing odours to the wavering water's winking margin.

 There rush and reed their rustling plumes and leaves like lances louted trembling 1520 green with sunlight. Then glad the soul of Flinding the fugitive; in his face the morning there glimmered golden, his gleaming hair was washed with sunlight. 'Awake from sadness, Túrin Thalion, and troublous thoughts! 1525
 On Ivrin's lake is endless laughter.
 Lo! cool and clear by crystal fountains she is fed unfailing, from defilement warded by Ylmir the old, who in ancient days, wielder of waters, here worked her beauty. 1530 From outmost Ocean yet often comes his message hither his magic bearing, the healing of hearts and hope and valour for foes of Bauglir. Friend is Ylmir who alone remembers in the Lands of Mirth 1535 the need of the Gnomes. Here Narog's waters (that in tongue of the Gnomes is 'torrent' naméd) are born, and blithely boulders leaping o'er the bents bounding with broken foam swirl down southward to the secret halls 1540 of Nargothrond by the Gnomes builded
 that death and thraldom in the dreadful throes
 of Nirnaith Ornoth, a number scanty, escaped unscathed. Thence skirting wild the Hills of the Hunters, the home of Beren 1545 and the Dancer of Doriath daughter of Thingol, it winds and wanders ere the willowy meads, Nan-Tathrin's land, for nineteen leagues it journeys joyful to join its flood with Sirion in the South. To the salt marshes 1550 where snipe and seamew and the sea-breezes first pipe and play they press together sweeping soundless to the seats of Ylmir, where the waters of Sirion and the waves of the sea murmurous mingle. A marge of sand 1555 there lies, all lit by the long sunshine;

there all day rustles wrinkled Ocean,
and the sea-birds call in solemn conclave, whitewinged hosts whistling sadly, uncounted voices crying endlessly. 1560
There a shining shingle on that shore lieth, whose pebbles as pearl or pale marble by spray and spindrift splashed at evening in the moon do gleam, or moan and grind when the Dweller in the Deep drives in fury 1565
the waters white to the walls of the land;
when the long-haired riders on their lathered horses with bit and bridle of blowing foam, in wrack wreathed and ropes of seaweed, to the thunder gallop of the thudding of the 1570 surf.'

Thus Flinding spake the spell feeling of Ylmir the old and unforgetful, which hale and holy haunted Ivrin and foaming Narog, so that fared there never Orc of Morgoth, and that eager stream 1575 no plunderer passed. If their purpose held to reach the realms that roamed beyond (nought yet knew they of Nargothrond) they harried o'er Hithlum the heights scaling that lay behind the lake's hollow, 1580 the Shadowy Mountains in the sheen mirrored of the pools of Ivrin. Pale and eager Túrin hearkened to the tale of Flinding:

the washing of waters in his words sounded, an echo as of Ylmir's awful conches 1585 in the abyss blowing. There born anew was hope in his heart as they hastened down to the lake of laughter. A long and narrow arm it reaches that ancient rocks o'ergrown with green girdle strongly, 1590 at whose outer end there open sudden a gap, a gateway in the grey boulders; whence thrusteth thin in threadlike jets newborn Narog, nineteen fathoms
o'er a flickering force falls in wonder, 1595
and a glimmering goblet with glass-lucent fountains fills he by his freshets carved in the cool bosom of the crystal stones.

There deeply drank ere day was fallen Túrin the toilworn and his true comrade; 1600 hurt's ease found he, heart's refreshment, from the meshes of misery his mind was loosed,
as they sat on the sward by the sound of water, and watched in wonder the westering sun o'er the wall wading of the wild mountains, 1605 whose peaks empurpled pricked the evening.
Then it dropped to the dark and deep shadows up the cliffs creeping quenched in twilight
the last beacons leashed with crimson.
To the stars upstanding stony-mantled 1610

the mountains waited till the moon arose o'er the endless East, and Ivrin's pools dreaming deeply dim reflected their pallid faces. In pondering fast woven, wordless, they waked no sound, 1615 till cold breezes keenly breathing clear and fragrant curled about them;
then sought they for sleep a sand-pavéd cove outcarven; there kindled fire, that brightly blossomed the beechen faggots 1620 in flowers of flame; floated upward a slender smoke, when sudden Túrin on the firelit face of Flinding gazed, and wondering words he wavering spake:
'O Gnome, I know not thy name or purpose 1625 or father's blood – what fate binds thee to a witless wayworn wanderer's footsteps, the bane of Beleg, his brother-in-arms?'

Then Flinding fearful lest fresh madness should seize for sorrow on the soul of Túrin, 1630 retold the tale of his toil and wandering;
how the trackless folds of Taur-na-Fuin, Deadly Nightshade, dreadly meshed him;
of Beleg the Bowman bold, undaunted, and that deed they dared on the dim hillside, 1635 that song has since unceasing wakened;
of the fate that fell, he faltering spake,
in the tangled thicket neath the twining thorns when Morgoth's might was moved abroad.
Then his voice vanished veiled in mourning, 1640 and lo! tears trickled on Túrin's face till loosed at last were the leashed torrents of his whelming woe. Long while he wept soundless, shaken, the sand clutching with griping fingers in grief unfathomed. 1645

But Flinding the faithful feared no longer;
no comfort cold he kindly found,
for sleep swept him into slumber dead.
There a singing voice sweetly vexed him and he woke and wondered: the watchfire 1650 faded;

the night was aging, nought was moving but a song upsoaring in the soundless dark went strong and stern to the starlit heaven.

'Twas Túrin that towering on the tarn's margin, up high o'er the head of the hushed water 1655 now falling faintly, let flare and echo
a song of sorrow and sad splendour, the dirge of Beleg's deathless glory.

There wondrous wove he words enchanted, that woods and water waked and answered, 1660
the rocks were wrung with ruth for Beleg.

That song he sang is since remembered, by Gnomes renewed in Nargothrond it widely has wakened warfain armies to battle with Bauglir - 'The Bowman's 1665 Friendship'.

'Tis told that Túrin then turned him back and fared to Flinding, and flung him down to sleep soundless till the sun mounted to the high heavens and hasted westward.
A vision he viewed in the vast spaces 1670 of slumber roving: it seemed he roamed up the bleak boulders of a bare hillside to a cup outcarven in a cruel hollow, whose broken brink bushes limb-wracked by the North-wind's knife in knotted anguish 1675 did fringe forbidding. There black unfriendly was a dark thicket, a dell of thorn-trees with yews mingled that the years had fretted.

The leafless limbs they lifted hopeless were blotched and blackened, barkless, 1680 naked,
a lifeless remnant of the levin's flame, charred chill fingers changeless pointing to the cold twilight. There called he longing:
'O Beleg, my brother, O Beleg, tell me where is buried thy body in these bitter regions?' - 1685 and the echoes always him answered 'Beleg'; yet a veiled voice vague and distant he caught that called like a cry at night o'er the sea's silence: 'Seek no longer.

My bow is rotten in the barrow ruinous; 1690
my grove is burned by grim lightning;
here dread dwelleth, none dare profane this angry earth, Orc nor goblin;
none gain the gate of the gloomy forest by this perilous path; pass they may not, 1695 yet my life has winged to the long waiting
in the halls of the Moon o'er the hills of the sea.
Courage be thy comfort, comrade lonely!'

Then he woke in wonder; his wit was healed,

courage him comforted, and he called aloud 1700
Flinding go-Fuillin, to his feet striding.

There the sun slanted its silver arrows through the wild tresses of the waters tumbling roofed with a radiant rainbow trembling.

‘Whither, O Flinding, our feet now turn we, 1705 or dwell we for ever by the dancing water, by the lake of laughter, alone, untroubled?’

‘To Nargothrond of the Gnomes, methinks,’ said Flinding, ‘my feet would fain wander, 1710 that Celegorm and Curufin, the crafty sons
of Fëanor founded when they fled southward;
there built a bulwark against Bauglir’s hate,
who live now lurking in league secret
with those five others in the forests of the East, fell unflinching foes of Morgoth. 1715

Maidros whom Morgoth maimed and tortured is lord and leader, his left wieldeth his sweeping sword; there is swift Maglor, there Damrod and Díriel and dark Cranthir, the seven seekers of their sire’s treasure. 1720

Now Orodreth rules the realms and caverns, the numbered hosts of Nargothrond.

There to woman’s stature will be waxen full frail Finduilas the fleet maiden his daughter dear, in his darkling halls 1725
a light, a laughter, that I loved of yore, and yet love in longing, and love calls me.’

Where Narog’s torrent gnashed and spouted down his stream bestrewn with stone and boulder, swiftly southward they sought their paths, 1730 and summer smiling smoothed their journey through day on day, down dale and wood where birds blithely with brimming music thrilled and trembled in thronging trees.

 No eyes them watched onward wending 1735 till they gained the gorge where Ginglith turns all glad and golden to greet the Narog.
 There her gentler torrent joins his tumult,
 and they glide together on the guarded plain
 to the Hunters' Hills that high to southward 1740
 uprear their rocks robed in verdure.
 There watchful waited the Wards of Narog, lest the need of the Gnomes from the North should come,
 for the sea in the South them safe guarded, and eager Narog the East defended. 1745 Their treegirt towers on the tall hilltops no light betrayed in the trees lurking, no horns hooted in the hills ringing in loud alarm; a leaguer silent unseen, stealthy, beset the stranger, 1750
 as of wild things wary that watch moveless,
 then follow fleetly with feet of velvet
 their heedless prey with padding hatred.
 In this fashion fought they, phantom hunters that wandering Orc and wild foeman 1755 unheard harried, hemmed in ambush.
 The slain are silent, and silent were the shafts of the nimble Gnomes of Nargothrond, who word or whisper warded sleepless from their homes deep-hidden, that hearsay 1760 never was to Bauglir brought. Bright hope knew they,

and east over Narog to open battle no cause or counsel had called them yet, though of shield and shaft and sheathéd swords, of warriors wieldy now waxed their host 1765 to power and prowess, and paths afar their scouts and woodmen scoured in hunting.

Thus the twain were tracked till the trees thickened and the river went rushing neath a rising bank, in foam hastened o'er the feet of the hills. 1770
In a gloom of green there they groped forward;
there his fate defended from flying death Túrin Thalion – a twisted thong of writhing roots enwrapped his foot;
as he fell there flashed, fleet, whitewingéd, 1775
a shrill-shafted arrow that shore his hair, and trembled sudden in a tree behind.
Then Flinding o'er the fallen fiercely shouted:
'Who shoots unsure his shafts at friends?
Flinding go-Fuillin of the folk of Narog 1780 and the son of Húrin his sworn comrade here flee to freedom from the foes of the North.'

His words in the woods awoke no echo;
no leaf there lisped, nor loosened twig there cracked, no creak of crawling 1785 movement stirred the silence. Still and soundless in the glades about were the green shadows.
Thus fared they on, and felt that eyes unseen saw them, and swift footsteps unheard hastened behind them ever, 1790 till each shaken bush or shadowy thicket they fled furtive in fear needless, for thereafter was aimed no arrow wingéd, and they came to a country kindly tended;

through flowery frith and fair acres 1795 they fared, and found of folk empty the leas and leasows and the lawns of Narog, the teeming tilth by trees enfolded twixt hills and river. The hoes unrecked in the fields were flung, and fallen ladders 1800 in the long grass lay of the lush orchards;
every tree there turned its tangled head and eyed them secretly, and the ears listened of the nodding grasses; though noontide glowed on land and leaf, their limbs were chilled. 1805 Never hall or homestead its high gables in the light uplifting in that land saw they,
but a pathway plain by passing feet was broadly beaten. Thither bent their steps Flinding go-Fuilin, whose feet remembered 1810 that white roadway. In a while they reached to the acres' end, that ever narrowing twixt wall and water did wane at last
to blossomy banks by the borders of the way.
A spuming torrent, in spate tumbling 1815 from the highest hill of the Hunters' Wold clove and crossed it; there of carven stone with slim and shapely slender archway a bridge was builded, a bow gleaming in the froth and flashing foam of Ingwil, 1820 that headlong hurried and hissed beneath.

Where it found the flood, far-journeyed Narog, there steeply stood the strong shoulders of the hills, o'erhanging the hurrying water;
there shrouded in trees a sheer terrace, 1825 wide and winding, worn to smoothness, was fashioned in the face of the falling slope.

Doors there darkly dim gigantic
were hewn in the hillside; huge their timbers, and their posts and lintels of ponderous 1830 stone.

They were shut unshakeable. Then shrilled a trumpet
as a phantom fanfare faintly winding in the hill from hollow halls far under;
a creaking portal with clangour backward was flung, and forth there flashed a throng, 1835 leaping lightly, lances wielding, and swift encircling seized bewildered the wanderers wayworn, wordless haled them through the gaping gateway to the glooms beyond.
Ground and grumbled on its great hinges 1840 the door gigantic; with din ponderous it clanged and closed like clap of thunder, and echoes awful in empty corridors there ran and rumbled under roofs unseen;
the light was lost. Then led them on 1845 down long and winding lanes of darkness their guards guiding their groping feet, till the faint flicker of fiery torches flared before them; fitful murmur as of many voices in meeting thronged 1850

they heard as they hastened. High sprang the roof.
Round a sudden turning they swung amazed,
and saw a solemn silent conclave, where hundreds hushed in huge twilight neath distant domes darkly vaulted 1855 them wordless waited. There waters flowed with washing echoes winding swiftly amid the multitude, and mounting pale for fifty fathoms a fountain sprang, and wavering wan, with winking redness 1860 flushed and flickering in the fiery lights, it fell at the feet in the far shadows of a king with crown and carven throne.

A voice they heard neath the vault rolling, and the king them called: 'Who come ye here 1865 from the North unloved to Nargothrond, a Gnome of bondage and a nameless Man?
No welcome finds here wandering outlaw;
save his wish be death he wins it not,
for those that have looked on our last refuge 1870
it boots not to beg other boon of me.'

Then Flinding go-Fuilin freely answered:
'Has the watch then waned in the woods of Narog,
since Orodreth ruled this realm and folk?
Or how have the hunted thus hither 1875 wandered,

if the warders willed it not thy word obeying;
or how hast not heard that thy hidden archer,
who shot his shaft in the shades of the forest,
there learned our lineage, O Lord of Narog, and knowing our names his notched arrows 1880 loosed no longer?' Then low and hushed a murmur moved in the multitude, and some were who said: "'Tis the same in truth:

the long looked-for, the lost is found,
the narrow path he knew to Nargothrond 1885 who was born and bred here from babe to youth';
and some were who said: 'The son of Fuilin was lost and looked for long years ago.

What sign or token that the same returns have we heard or seen? Is this haggard 1890 fugitive

with back bended the bold leader, the scout who scoured, scorning danger, most far afield of the folk of Narog?'
'That tale was told us,' returned answer the Lord Orodreth, 'but belief were rash. 1895

That alone of the lost, whom leagues afar the Orcs of Angband in evil bonds have dragged to the deeps, thou darest home, by grace or valour, from grim thralldom, what proof dost thou proffer? What plea dost 1900 show

that a Man, a mortal, on our mansions hidden should look and live, our league sharing?'

Thus the curse on the kindred for the cruel slaughter
at the Swans' Haven there swayed his heart, but Flinding go-Fuilin fiercely answered: 1905
'Is the son of Húrin, who sits on high in a deathless doom dreadly chainéd, unknown, nameless, in need of plea to fend from him the fate of foe and spy?

Flinding the faithful, the far wanderer, 1910 though form and face fires of anguish and bitter bondage, Balrogs' torment, have seared and twisted, for a song of welcome had hoped in his heart at that home-coming that he dreamed of long in dark labour. 1915 Are these deep places to dungeons turned,
a lesser Angband in the land of the Gnomes?'

Thereat was wrath aroused in Orodreth's heart, and the muttering waxed to many voices, and this and that the throng shouted; 1920
when sweet and sudden a song awoke, a voice of music o'er that vast murmur mounted in melody to the misty domes; with clear echoes the caverned arches it filled, and trembled frail and slender, 1925 those words weaving of welcome home that the wayweary had wooed from care since the Gnomes first knew need and wandering.
Then hushed was the host; no head was turned,
for long known and loved was that lifted 1930 voice,

and Flinding knew it at the feet of the king like stone graven standing silent with heart laden; but Húrin's son was waked to wonder and to wistful thought, and searching the shadows that the seat 1935 shrouded,
the kingly throne, there caught he thrice
a gleam, a glimmer, as of garments white.

'Twas frail Finduilas, fleet and slender, to woman's stature, wondrous beauty, now grown in glory, that glad welcome there raised in ruth, and wrath was stilled. 1940

Locked fast the love had lain in her heart that in laughter grew long years ago when in the meads merrily a maiden played with fleet-footed Fuilin's youngling. 1945

No searing scars of sundering years could blind those eyes bright with welcome, and wet with tears wistful trembling at the grief there graven in grim furrows on the face of Flinding. 'Father,' said she, 1950

'what dream of doubt dreadly binds thee?
'Tis Flinding go-Fuillin, whose faith of yore none dared to doubt. This dark, lonely, mournful-fated Man beside him if his oath avows the very offspring 1955 of Húrin Thalion, what heart in this throng shall lack belief or love refuse?

But are none yet nigh us that knew of yore that mighty of Men, mark of kinship to seek and see in these sorrow-laden 1960 form and features? The friends of Morgoth not thus, methinks, through thirst and hunger come without comrades, nor have countenance thus grave and guileless, glance unflinching.'

Then did Túrin's heart tremble wondering 1965 at the sweet pity soft and gentle of that tender voice touched with wisdom that years of yearning had yielded slow;

and Orodreth, whose heart knew ruth seldom, yet loved deeply that lady dear,	1970 gave ear and answer to her eager words, and his doubt and dread of dire treachery, and his quick anger, he quelled within him.
No few were there found who had fought of old where Finweg fell in flame of swords,	1975
and Húrin Thalion had hewn the throngs, the dark Glamhoth's demon legions, and who called there looked and cried aloud: 'Tis the face of the father new found on earth, and his strong stature and stalwart arms;	1980 though such care and sorrow never claimed his sire, whose laughing eyes were lighted clear at board or battle, in bliss or in woe.'
Nor could lack belief for long the words and faith of Flinding when friend and kin and his father hastening that face beheld.	1985
Lo! sire and son did sweet embrace neath trees entwining tangled branches at the dark doorways of those deep mansions that Fuilin's folk afar builded,	1990 and dwelt in the deep of the dark woodland to the West on the slopes of the Wold of Hunters. Of the four kindreds that followed the king, the watchtowers' lords, the wold's keepers and the guards of the bridge, the gleaming bow	1995 that was flung o'er the foaming froth of Ingwil, from Fuilin's children were first chosen, most noble of name, renowned in valour.

In those halls in the hills at that homecoming mirth was mingled with melting tears for the unyielding years whose yoke of pain the form and face of Fuilin's son had changed and burdened, chilled the laughter that leapt once lightly to his lips and eyes.	2000
Now in kindly love was care lessened, with song assuaged sadness of hearts; the lights were lit and lamps kindled o'er the burdened board; there bade they feast Túrin Thalion with his true comrade at the long tables' laden plenty,	2005
where dish and goblet on the dark-gleaming wood well-waxéd, where the wine-flagons engraven glistened gold and silver. Then Fuilin filled with flowing mead, dear-hoarded drink dark and potent a carven cup with curious brim, by ancient art of olden smiths fairly fashioned, filled with marvels; there gleamed and lived in grey silver the folk of Faërie in the first noontide	2010
of the Blissful Realms; with their brows wreathéd in garlands golden with their gleaming hair in the wind flying and their wayward feet fitful flickering, on unfading lawns the ancient Elves there everlasting danced undying in the deep pasture of the gardens of the Gods; there Glingol shone and Bansil bloomed with beams shimmering, mothwhite moonlight from its misty flowers; the hilltops of Tûn there high and green	2015
	2020
	2025 2030

were crowned by Côr, climbing, winding, town white-walled where the tower of Ing with pale pinnacle pierced the twilight, and its crystal lamp illumined clear
with slender shaft the Shadowy Seas. 2035

Through wrack and ruin, the wrath of the Gods, through weary wandering, waste and exile,
had come that cup, carved in gladness,
in woe hoarded, in waning hope
when little was left of the lore of old. 2040

Now Fuilin at feast filled it seldom save in pledge of love to proven friend; blithely bade he of that beaker drink for the sake of his son that sate nigh him Túrin Thalion in token sure 2045 of a league of love long enduring.

‘O Húrin’s child chief of Hithlum, with mourning marred, may the mead of the Elves thy heart uplift with hope lightened;
nor fare thou from us the feast ended, 2050 here deign to dwell; if this deep mansion thus dark-dolven dimly vaulted displease thee not, a place awaits thee.’

There deeply drank a draught of sweetness Túrin Thalion and returned his thanks 2055 in eager earnest, while all the folk with loud laughter and long feasting, with mournful lay or music wild of magic minstrels that mighty songs did weave with wonder, there wooed their hearts 2060

from black foreboding; there bed’s repose their guest was granted, when in gloom silent the light and laughter and the living voices were quenched in slumber. Now cold and slim the sickle of the Moon was silver tilted 2065

o'er the wan waters that washed unsleeping, nightshadowed Narog, the Gnome-river.
In tall treetops of the tangled wood there hooted hollow the hunting owls.

Thus fate it fashioned that in Fuilin's house 2070 the dark destiny now dwelt awhile of Túrin the tall. There he toiled and fought with the folk of Fuilin for Flinding's love; lore long forgotten learned among them,
for light yet lingered in those leaguered 2075 places,
and wisdom yet lived in that wild people, whose minds yet remembered the Mountains of the West
and the faces of the Gods, yet filled with glory more clear and keen than kindreds of the dark or Men unwitting of the mirth of old. 2080

Thus Fuilin and Flinding friendship showed him, and their halls were his home, while high summer waned to autumn and the western gales the leaves loosened from the labouring boughs;
the feet of the forest in fading gold 2085
and burnished brown were buried deeply;
a restless rustle down the roofless aisles sighed and whispered. Lo! the Silver Wherry, the sailing Moon with slender mast,

was filled with fires as of furnace golden 2090
whose hold had hoarded the heats of summer, whose shrouds were shaped of shining flame uprising ruddy o'er the rim of Evening
by the misty wharves on the margin of the world.
Thus the months fled and mightily he 2095 fared

in the forest with Flinding, and his fate waited slumbering a season, while he sought for joy the lore learning and the league sharing
of the Gnomes renowned of Nargothrond.

The ways of the woods he wandered far, 2100 and the land's secrets he learned swiftly by winter unhindered to weathers hardened, whether snow or sleet or slanting rain from glowering heavens grey and sunless cold and cruel was cast to earth, 2105

till the floods were loosed and the fallow waters of sweeping Narog, swollen, angry, were filled with flotsam and foaming turbid passed in tumult; or twinkling pale ice-hung evening was opened wide, 2110
a dome of crystal o'er the deep silence of the windless wastes and the woods standing like frozen phantoms under flickering stars.

By day or night danger needless he dared and sought for, his dread vengeance 2115 ever seeking unsated on the sons of Angband;
yet as winter waxed wild and pathless, and biting blizzards the bare faces lashed and tortured of the lonely tors

and haggard hilltops, in the halls more often	2120
was he found in fellowship with the folk of Narog, and cunning there added in the crafts of hand,
and in subtle mastery of song and music
and peerless poesy, to his proven lore and wise woodcraft; there wondrous tales	2125 were told to Túrin in tongues of gold in those mansions deep, there many a day to the hearth and halls of the haughty king did those friends now fare to feast and game, for frail Finduilas her father urged	2130
to his board and favour to bid those twain, and it grudging her granted that grimhearted king deep-counselled – cold his anger,
his ruth unready, his wrath enduring;
yet fierce and fell by the fires of hate	2135
his breast was burned for the broods of Hell (his son had they slain, the swift-footed Halmir the hunter of hart and boar), and kinship therein the king ere long in his heart discovered for Húrin's son,	2140 dark and silent, as in dreams walking of anguish and regret and evergrowing feud unsated. Thus favour soon by the king accorded of the company of his board he was member made, and in many a deed	2145 and wild venture to West and North he achieved renown among the chosen warriors and fearless bowmen; in far battles in secret ambush and sudden onslaught, where fell-tongued flew the flying serpents,	2150 their shafts envenomed, in valleys shrouded

he played his part, but it pleased him little,
who trusted to targe and tempered sword, whose hand was hungry for the hilts it missed but dared never a blade since the doom of 2155

Beleg

to draw or handle. Dear-holden was he, though he wished nor willed it, and his works were praised.

When tales were told of times gone by,
of valour they had known, of vanished triumph, glory half-forgot, grief remembered, 2160

then they bade and begged him be blithe and sing of deeds in Doriath in the dark forest by the shadowy shores that shunned the light where Esgalduin the Elf-river by root-fenced pools roofed with silence, 2165 by deep eddies darkly gurgling, flowed fleetly on past the frowning portals of the Thousand Caves. Thus his thought recalled the woodland ways where once of yore

Beleg the Bowman had a boy guided 2170

by slade and slope and swampy thicket

neath trees enchanted; then his tongue faltered and his tale was stilled.

At Túrin's sorrow

one marvelled and was moved, a maiden fair

the frail Finduilas that Failivrin, 2175

the glimmering sheen on the glassy pools of Ivrin's lake the Elves in love had named anew. By night she pondered and by day wondered what depth of woe

lay locked in his heart his life marring;	2180 for the doom of dread and death that had fallen on Beleg the bowman in unbroken silence Túrin warded, nor might tale be won of Flinding the faithful of their fare and deeds in the waste together. Now waned her love	2185
for the form and face furrowed with anguish, for the bended back and broken strength, the wistful eyes and the withered laughter of Flinding the faithful, though filled was her heart with deepwelling pity and dear friendship.	2190 Grown old betimes and grey-frosted, he was wise and kindly with wit and counsel, with sight and foresight, but slow to wrath nor fiercely valiant, yet if fight he must his share he shirked not, though the shreds of	2195
fear
in his heart yet hung; he hated no man, but he seldom smiled, save suddenly a light in his grave face glimmered and his glance was fired:
Finduilas maybe faring lightly
on the sward he saw or swinging pale,	2200
a sheen of silver down some shadowy hall.*
Yet to Túrin was turned her troublous heart against will and wisdom and waking thought:
in dreams she sought him, his dark sorrow with love lightening, so that laughter shone	2205
in eyes new-kindled, and her Elfin name he eager spake, as in endless spring they fared free-hearted through flowers enchanted with hand in hand o'er the happy pastures of that land that is lit by no light of Earth, 2210 by no moon nor sun, down mazy ways to the black abysmal brink of waking.

From woe unhealed the wounded heart of Túrin the tall was turned to her.
Amazed and moved, his mind's secret 2215 half-guessed, half-guarded, in gloomy hour of night's watches, when down narrow winding paths of pondering he paced wearily, he would lonely unlock, then loyal-hearted shut fast and shun, or shroud his grief 2220 in dreamless sleep, deep oblivion where no echo entered of the endless war of waking worlds, woe nor friendship, flower nor firelight nor the foam of seas,
a land illumined by no light at all. 2225

'O! hands unholy, O! heart of sorrow, O! outlaw whose evil is yet unatoned, wilt thou, troth-breaker, a treason new to thy burden bind; thy brother-in-arms, Flinding go-Fuilin thus foully betray, 2230 who thy madness tended in mortal perils, to thy waters of healing thy wandering feet did lead at the last to lands of peace, where his life is rooted and his love dwelleth?
O! stained hands his hope steal not!' 2235

Thus love was fettered in loyal fastness and coldly clad in courteous word;
yet he would look and long for her loveliness,

in her gentle words his joy finding,
her face watching when he feared no eye 2240 might mark his mood. One marked it all - Failivrin's face, the fleeting gleams, like sun through clouds sailing hurriedly over faded fields, that flickered and went out as Túrin passed; the tremulous smiles, 2245 his grave glances out of guarded shade, his sighs in secret - one saw them all, Flinding go-Fuillin, who had found his home and lost his love to the lying years, he watched and wondered, no word speaking, 2250 and his heart grew dark 'twixt hate and pity, bewildered, weary, in the webs of fate.
Then Finduilas, more frail and wan twixt olden love now overthrown and new refused, did nightly weep; 2255 and folk wondered at the fair pallor of the hands upon her harp, her hair of gold on slender shoulders slipped in tumult, the glory of her eyes that gleamed with fires of secret thought in silent deeps. 2260

Many bosoms burdened with foreboding vague their glooms disowned neath glad laughter.
In song and silence, snow and tempest, winter wore away; to the world there came a year once more in youth unstained, 2265
nor were leaves less green, light less golden, the flowers less fair, though in faded hearts no spring was born, though speeding nigh danger and dread and doom's footsteps

to their halls hasted. Of the host of iron	2270 came tale and tidings ever treading nearer; Orcs unnumbered to the East of Narog roamed and ravened on the realm's borders, the might of Morgoth was moved abroad.
No ambush stayed them; the archers yielded	2275
each vale by vale, though venomed arrows

Here both A and B end abruptly, and I think it is certain that no more of the poem was ever written.

NOTES

- 1409 Tengwethil B, Taingwethil A. This is the reverse of the previous occurrences; see lines 431, 636.
- 1417–18 These lines are bracketed in B, and line 1418 struck through; in the margin is a mark of deletion, but with a query beside it.
- 1448 Nirnaith Únoth A, and B as typed; emended in pencil in B to Nirnaith Ornoth. Earlier in the poem (lines 13, 218) the forms were Nínin Udathriol emended in B to Nínin Unothradin (also Nirnaithos Unothradin at line 13). Cf. line 1543.

- 1469 Ulmo A, and B as typed; in B Ulmo struck through in pencil and replaced by Ylmir, but this also struck through. I read Ylmir; see note to line 1529.
- 1525 Túrin Thalion A, and B as typed (not Túrin Thaliodrin, see note to line 1324).
- 1529 Ylmir: so already in A and B as typed; so also at lines 1534, 1553, 1572, 1585. See note to line 1469.
- 1537 This line was struck through in pencil in B.
- 1542–
3 These lines were bracketed in pencil in B, and Not so written in margin. Though Únoth was not here emended I read Ornoth (see note to line 1448).
- 1558 the sea-birds call in solemn conclave: cf. the tale of The Coming of the Elves and the Making of Kôr, I. 124.
- 1673–
6 Cf. lines 1036–9.
- 1696–
7 Cf. lines 1283–4.
- 1710–
11 Line 1710 is wholly and 1711 partly crossed out in B, with marginal additions to make 1711 read:

[by] Felagund founded flying southward

Also written in the margin is: 'before Nirnaith Únoth'. At line 1711 A has found for founded, but as the manuscript was written very rapidly this may not be significant.

1713–
20 These lines are bracketed in B, as if needing revision, and two lines are written in the margin for insertion after 1715:

that home came never to their halls of old
since the field of tears was fought and lost.

I have not included these lines (written, it seems, at the same time as the other marginal comments in this passage) in the text in view of the complexity of the 'historical background' at this point; see the Commentary, pp. 84–5.

Against this passage is written in the margin:

but Nargothrond was founded by Felagund Finrod's son (whose brothers were Angrod Egnor & Orodreth).
Curufin and Celegorm dwelt at Nargothrond.

1719 Cranthor A, Cranthir B as typed.

1724 Finduilas: Failivrin A, and B as typed; Finduilas written in pencil in the margin of B; so also at line 1938. See lines 2130, 2175, 2199.

1938 Finduilas: as at line 1724.

1945 The word youngling is struck out in

B and Flinding written against it, but the resulting Fuilin's Flinding (with alliteration in the second half-line) cannot possibly have been intended. Subsequently another word was written in the margin, but this is illegible.

1974–
5 Not so written in the margin of B.

1975 Finweg A, and B as typed; late emendation to Fingon in B. I retain Finweg since that is still the name in the 1930 'Silmarillion'.

1993–
8 In A and in B as typed these lines were differently ordered:

Of the four kindreds that followed the king,
most noble of name, renowned in valour, the watchtowers' lords, the wold's keepers from Fuilin's children were first chosen, and the guards of the bridge, the gleaming bow that was flung o'er the foaming froth of Ingwil.

2027 Glingol A, and B as typed; late emendation to Glingal in B. I retain Glingol, the form in the Lost Tales and still in the 1930 'Silmarillion'; in the published work Glingal is the name of the golden tree of Gondolin.

2028 Bansil A, and B as typed; late emendation to Belthil in B. I retain

- Bansil* for the same reason as Glingol in line 2027.
- 2030 there high and green the hill of Tûn
A, and B as typed; emended in pencil in B to the reading given; was 2031 not corrected to were, but that hilltops (plural) was intended is shown by the text C, see p. 82.
- 2130 I give Finduilas, though Failivrin was not so emended here in B, as it was at lines 1724, 1938. See notes to lines 2175. 2199.
- 2164 Esgaduin A, and B as typed; emended in pencil to Esgalduin in B.
- 2175 the frail Finduilas that Failivrin as typed B; the frail Failivrin changed at the time of writing in A to Findóriel (sc. the frail Findóriel that Failivrin &c.).
- 2199 Finduilas A and B; Failivrin written in the margin of A. At the subsequent occurrences (Failivrin 2242, Finduilas 2253) the names both in A and in B are as in the printed text.

Note on the texts of the section 'Failivrin'

B comes to an end as a typescript at line 2201, but continues as a well-written manuscript for a further 75 lines. This last part is written on the paper of good quality that my father used for many years in all his writing (University lectures, The Silmarillion, The Lord of the Rings, etc.) in ink or pencil (i.e. when not typing): this plain paper was supplied to him by the Examination Schools at Oxford University, being the unused pages of the booklets of paper provided for examination candidates. The change in paper does not show however that he had moved from Leeds to Oxford (cf. p. 3), since he acted as an external examiner at Oxford in 1924 and 1925; but it does suggest that the final work on the Lay (before Leithian was begun) dates from the latter part of the one year or the earlier part of the next. The conclusion of A is also written on this paper.

There is a further short text to be considered here, a well-written manuscript that extends from line 2005 to line 2225, which I will call 'C'. Textual details show clearly that C followed B – not, I think, at any long interval. Some emendations made to B were made to C also. I give here a list of the more important differences of C from B (small changes of punctuation and sentence-connection are not noticed).

C bears the title Túrin in the House of Fuilin and his son Flinding. It is not clear whether this was to be the title of a fourth section of the poem, but it seems unlikely, if the third section was to remain 'Failivrin'.

- | | |
|------------|---|
| 2005 | Now was care lessened in kindly love C. |
| 2020 | noontide] summer pencil emendation in C. |
| 2027–
8 | Glingol > Glingal and Bansil > Belthil pencil emendations in C as in |

B.

2029 The original reading of B and C was like magic moonlight from its mothwhite flowers; this was differently emended in C, to like moths of pearl in moonlit flowers.

2030– C as written was exactly as the text
2 of B after emendation (with were for was 2031); these lines were then crossed out and the following substituted:

there high and green that hill by the sea was crowned by Tûn, climbing, winding in tall walls of white, where the tower of Ing

2036–53 are omitted in C (with Thence for There 2054).

2069 After hunting owls C has lines of omission dots, and the text takes up again at line 2081.

2083 waned to autumn] waned towards winter pencil emendations in C.

2090 as of furnace golden] as a furnace of gold C.

2114– are omitted in C.

16

2123– C omits 2124, 2125b–7, and reads: 8

and in subtle mastery of song and music
to his wise woodcraft and wielding of arms.
To the hearth and halls of the haughty king

2135-8 C omits these lines (referring to Orodreth's son Halmir, slain by Orcs) and reads:

his ruth unready, his wrath enduring.
But kinship of mood the king ere long

2142b- C omits these lines, and reads: 2143a

of anguish and regret. Thus was honour granted by the king to Túrin; of the company of his board

2158 were told] men told emendation in C.

2164 Esgalduin C as written; see note to this line above.

Commentary on Part III 'Failivrin'

In this very remarkable section of the poem a great development has taken place in the story since the Tale of Turambar (if there was an intervening stage there is now no trace of it); while concurrently the history of the exiled Noldoli was being deepened and extended from its representation in the outlines for Gilfanon's Tale – a factor that complicates the presentation of the poems, since statements about that history were often superseded during the long process of composition.

Most notable of all in this part of the poem is the description of Nargothrond, unique in the Lay. In all the later rewritings and restructurings of the Túrin saga this part was never touched, apart from the development of the relations between Túrin, Gwindor, and Finduilas which I have given in Unfinished Tales, pp. 155-9. In this there is a parallel to Gondolin, very fully described in the tale of The Fall of Gondolin, but never again. As I said in the introduction to Unfinished Tales (p. 5):

It is thus the remarkable fact that the only full account that my father ever wrote of the story of Tuor's sojourn in Gondolin, his union with Idril Celebrindal, the birth of Eärendil, the treachery of Maeglin, the sack of the city, and the escape of the fugitives – a story that was a central element in his imagination of the First Age – was the narrative composed in his youth.

Gondolin and Nargothrond were each made once, and not remade. They remained powerful sources and images – the more powerful, perhaps, because never remade, and never remade, perhaps, because so powerful. Both Tuor and Túrin were indeed to receive written form outside the condensed Silmarillion as long prose narratives, and what my father achieved of this intention I have given in the first two sections of Unfinished Tales; but though he set out to remake Gondolin he never reached the city again: after climbing the endless slope of the Orfalch Echor and passing through the long line of heraldic gates he paused with Tuor at the vision of Gondolin amid the plain, and never recrossed Tumladen. The remaking of Túrin went much further, but here too he skirted the imaginative focus of Nargothrond.

The founding of Nargothrond

I shall discuss first the 'background' history, which centres on the complex question of the founding of Nargothrond. In the Tale (II. 81–2) Nargothrond is not named, and is represented by the Caves of the Rodothlim; as in the poem, Orodreth was the chief of these Gnomes, but he was then an isolated figure, and not yet associated in kinship with other princes. Nothing is said there of the origin of the redoubt, but that it was imagined to have arisen (like Gondolin) after the Battle of Unnumbered Tears is, I think, certain, since in the earliest phase of the legends, as I remarked in commenting on Gilfanon's Tale (I. 242), the entire later history of the long years of the Siege of Angband, ending with the Battle of Sudden Flame (Dagor Bragollach), of the passage of Men over the Mountains into Beleriand and their taking service with the Noldorin Kings, had yet to emerge; indeed these outlines give the effect of only a brief time elapsing between the coming of the Noldoli from Kôr and their great defeat [in the Battle of Unnumbered Tears].

In the poem, this idea is still clearly present in lines 1542-4:

the secret halls
of Nargothrond by the Gnomes builded
that death and thraldom in the dreadful throes
of Nirnaith Ornoth, a number scanty, escaped unscathed.

Against this passage my father wrote 'Not so'; and this comment obviously means 'Nargothrond was not founded after the Battle of Unnumbered Tears', as is further shown by his note to lines 1710-11:

(to Nargothrond)
that Celegorm and Curufin, the crafty sons
of Fëanor founded when they fled southward

against which he wrote: 'before Nirnaith Únoth'. When, then, was it founded? The 'Sketch of the Mythology', certainly later than the poem (the background of which it was written to explain), already in its earliest form knows of the Leaguer of Angband and of Morgoth's breaking of the Leaguer – though described in the barest possible way, without any reference to the battle that ended it; and it is said there that at that time 'Gnomes and Ilkorins and Men are scattered ... Celegorm and Curufin found the realm of Nargothrond on the banks of Narog in the south of the Northern lands.' The 'Sketch' (again, in its earliest, unrevised, form) also states that Celegorm and Curufin despatched a host from Nargothrond to the Battle of Unnumbered Tears, that this host joined with that of Maidros and Maglor, but 'arrived too late for the main battle'. 'They are beaten back and driven into the South-east, where they long time dwelt, and did not go back to Nargothrond. There Orodreth ruled the remnant.'

The problem is to explain how it comes about in the earlier story, as found in the poem (Nargothrond founded by Celegorm and Curufin after the Battle of Unnumbered Tears), that Celegorm and Curufin are no longer there when Túrin comes, and Orodreth is king. Why do they live now lurking ... in the forests of the East with their five brothers (1713-14)?

The only explanation that I can put forward is as follows. When my father wrote lines 1542-4 his view was that Nargothrond was founded after the Battle of Unnumbered Tears (this is quite explicit). But when he wrote lines 1710-15

(to Nargothrond)
that Celegorm and Curufin, the crafty sons
of Fëanor founded when they fled southward;
there built a bulwark against Bauglir's hate,
who live now lurking in league secret
with those five others in the forests of the East fell unflinching foes of Morgoth

1710
1715

the later story was already present. (There would be nothing uncharacteristic about this; in the Lay of Leithian the story changes from one Canto to the next.) Thus when they fled southward refers to the flight of Celegorm and Curufin from the battle that ended the Leaguer of Angband; they live now lurking ... in the forests of the East refers to the period after the Battle of Unnumbered Tears, when 'they did not go back to Nargothrond' and 'Orodreth ruled the remnant', as stated in the 'Sketch'.^{*} On this view, my father's note against lines 1710-11 ('before Nirnaith Únoth') was mistaken – he took the lines to refer to the old story (as 1542-4 certainly do), whereas in fact they refer to the later. This explanation may seem far-fetched, but it is less so than the demonstrably correct solutions to other puzzles in the history of 'The Silmarillion', and I see no other way out of the difficulty. – The two additional lines to follow 1715:

that home came never to their halls of old
since the field of tears was fought and lost

refer (I think) to Celegorm and Curufin, and reinforce the reference to the later story (i.e. that after the Battle of Unnumbered Tears they did not return to Nargothrond).

The change of lines 1710-11 to make the passage read

(to Nargothrond)
by Felagund founded flying southward

and the marginal note against 1713-20 'but Nargothrond was founded by Felagund Finrod's son' etc., reflect of course a further stage, though a stage that came in soon after the 'Sketch' was first written. The essential shifts in the history of Nargothrond to this point are certainly thus:

- (1) Orodreth ruled the Rodothlim in their caves, first inhabited after the Battle of Unnumbered Tears.
- (2) Celegorm and Curufin founded Nargothrond after the Battle of Unnumbered Tears.
- (3) Celegorm and Curufin founded Nargothrond after the breaking of the Leaguer of Angband; they went with a host to the Battle of Unnumbered Tears and did not return, but remained in the East; Orodreth ruled the remnant of the Gnomes of Nargothrond.

(4) Felagund son of Finrod and his brothers Angrod, Egnor, and Orodreth founded Nargothrond after the breaking of the Leaguer of Angband; Celegorm and Curufin dwelt there.

Another sign of development in the history and genealogy of the Gnomish princes is the mention of Finweg, later emended in the B-text to Fingon, who fell in flame of swords at the Battle of Unnumbered Tears (1975). Finweg has appeared early in the poem (line 29), but there as a spelling or form of Finwë (Nólemë), founder of the line; this Finweg appears in the 'Sketch', as originally written, as the son of Fingolfin.

The Sons of Fëanor have previously all been named only in the Tale of the Nauglafring (ll. 241); now (1716 ff.), with Cranthir (emended from Cranthor in B), and Díriel for earlier Dinithel (?Durithel), they reach the forms they long retained. Characteristic epithets appear: Maglor is 'swift', Cranthir 'dark', and Curufin's 'craftiness', already appearing in the Tale of the Nauglafring, extends here to Celegorm. Maidros' wielding his sword with his left hand is mentioned, which clearly implies that the story that Morgoth had him hung from a cliff by his right hand, and that Finweg (> Fingon) rescued him, was already present, as it is in the 'Sketch'. His torment and maiming was mentioned in the outlines for Gilfanon's Tale (l. 238, 240), but not described.

To turn now to the foreground narrative of this part of the poem. The poem advances on the Tale by mentioning the disposal of Beleg's sword, not mentioned in the Tale; but here Flinding hides it in the hollow of a tree (1342), and it plays no further part in the story. If the poem had gone further Túrin would have received his black sword in Nargothrond in gift from Orodreth, as happens in the Tale (ll. 83). In the Tale it is said that Túrin 'had not wielded a sword since the slaying of Beleg, but rather had he been contented with a mighty club'; in the poem this reappears with the implication made explicit (2155-6):

dared never a blade since the doom of Beleg to draw or handle.

The burial of Beleg now appears, with his great bow beside him (1399 ff.), and Túrin's kiss survives from the Tale; that the mark of his grief over the death of Beleg (called the third of his sorrows, 1421) never left his face was an enduring feature of the legend.

Geography

In the Tale (ll. 80-1) very little is made of the journey of Flinding and Túrin from the place of Beleg's death to Nargothrond: by the light of Flinding's lamp they 'fared by night and hid by day and were lost in the hills, and the Orcs found them not'. In the poem, on the other hand, the journey is quite fully described, and contains some noteworthy features; moreover there is nothing in the description that contradicts the earliest 'Silmarillion' map (to be given in the next volume), which dates from this period and may have been made originally in association with this poem. The wanderers pass at midnight by the Mound of Slain, looming up under the moon at the furthest end/of Dor-na-Fauglith's dusty spaces (1439-40); this feature does not recur again in the story of Túrin. The only previous reference to the great burial-mound is in the outlines for Gilfanon's Tale, where it is called the Hill of Death, and was raised by the Sons of Feanor (l. 241). It is said in the poem that Túrin despite his heavy listlessness turned his hand/toward Thangorodrim at Flinding's words concerning the Mound, and cursed Morgoth thrice - as did Fëanor in the hour of his death after the Battle-under-Stars (The Silmarillion p. 107); the one was doubtless the precursor of the other. The inviolability of the Mound now appears (1450-2).

Túrin and Flinding now crossed Sirion not far from his source in the Shadowy Mountains, where the river was fordable (1457 ff.); this is the first reference to Sirion's Well. Sirion's great journey to the Sea is described, with references to his passage underground (1467; cf. Il. 195, 217) and through lands beloved of Ylmir (Ulmo). The travellers then find themselves in Nan Dungorthin, which was mentioned in the Tale of Tinúviel (see Il. 35, 62-3): Huan found Beren and Tinúviel after their escape from Angband in 'that northward region of Artanor that was called afterward Nan Dumgorthin, the land of the dark idols', 'even then a dark land and gloomy and foreboding, and dread wandered beneath its lowering trees'. My father hesitated long about the placing of this land: in the Gnomish dictionary it was east of Artanor (Il. 62), in the Tale of Tinúviel a 'northward region of Artanor', while here it is west of Sirion, in a valley of the southern slopes of the Shadowy Mountains. In the earliest 'Silmarillion' map Nan Dungorthin was first likewise placed west of Sirion (west of the Isle of Werewolves), before being returned once more to the region north of Doriath, where it remained.

It is said that when Túrin and Flinding climbed out of the vale of Nan Dungorthin they southward saw the slopes of Hithlum/more warm and friendly (1496-7). At first sight this seems difficult to understand, but I think that the meaning is: they were indeed on the slopes of Hithlum at the time (i.e. below the southern faces of the Shadowy Mountains that fenced Hithlum), but looking southward (actually southwestward) they saw more agreeable regions further along the foothills, towards Ivrin. This is the first appearance of Ivrin, source of the Narog, and it is seen very clearly. The line (1537) giving the meaning of Narog (Gnomish, 'torrent') was struck out, but this (I think) was because my father felt that it was intrusive, not that the etymology was rejected. In this connection it may be mentioned that in a list of Old English equivalents of Elvish names, composed some years after the time of the present poem and associated with Ælfwine's translations of Elvish texts into his own language, occur Narog: Hlýda and Nargothrond: Hlýdingaburg. Hlýda was the name in Old English of March ('the noisy month of wind'; cf. the Quenya name Súlimë and the Sindarin name Gwaeron); related words are hlúd (Modern English loud), hlýd 'sound', hlýdan 'make a sound'. The meaning is here undoubtedly 'the loud one'; it lies behind the English stream-name Lydbrook.

Following the course of the Narog southward from Ivrin, the travellers gained the gorge where Ginglith turns

all glad and golden to greet the Narog.
There her gentler torrent joins his tumult,
and they glide together on the guarded plain
to the Hunters' Hills that high to southward uprear their rocks robed in verdure.

(1736-41)

A little earlier Flinding has described to Túrin how Narog, passing Nargothrond, 'thence skirted wild the Hills of the Hunters, the home of Beren and the Dancer of Doriath' (1544-6). In these verses are the first appearances of the river Ginglith, the Guarded Plain, and the Hills of the Hunters (all shown on the earliest map), though the hills themselves are described without being named in the Tale, ll. 96. On the map Nargothrond is shown near the northern extremity of the Hills of the Hunters, which extend far to the southward, falling down to the coast of the Sea west of Sirion's mouths. Various things are said of these hills. In the Tale they are 'high and tree-grown'; in the poem they uprear their rocks robed in verdure; in The Silmarillion (p. 122), where they are called Taur-en-Faroth or the High Faroth, they are 'great wooded highlands'; in the Narn (p. 116) they are 'brown and bare'. In the poem they are also called the Hunters' Wold (1816), the Wold of Hunters (1992), where the word is probably used in the old sense of 'forest, wooded uplands'. If we judge by my father's unfinished watercolour of the Doors of Nargothrond, painted in all probability in 1928 (see Pictures by J. R. R. Tolkien no. 33), he saw the hills as great rocky heights standing up from thick forest on their lower slopes. At line 1746 the Wards of Narog look out from their treegirt towers on the tall hilltops; these watchtowers were in the north of the Hills of the Hunters and looking northwards (1743–5), and it may not be casual therefore that on the earliest map the northern end (only) of the hills is shown as heavily forested.

As Túrin and Flinding came south down the west bank of Narog the river hastened o'er the feet of the hills (1770), and the fields and orchards through which they passed ever narrowing

twixt wall and water did wane at last
to blossomy banks by the borders of the way (1812–14)

The map likewise shows the Narog drawing steadily closer to the northeastern edge of the Hills of the Hunters. Here the travellers crossed the foaming Ingwil, falling down from the hills, by a slender bridge; this is the first appearance of this stream (cf. The Silmarillion p. 122: 'the short and foaming stream Ringwil tumbled headlong into Narog from the High Faroth'), and the bridge over it is mentioned nowhere else.

The Land of the Dead that Live (Beren and Tinúviel after their return) is now placed in the Hills of the Hunters (1545–6), where it was originally placed also on the map. This land was moved even more often than was Nan Dungorthin. In the Tale of the Nauglafring it was in Hisilómë (but with a note on the manuscript saying that it must be placed in 'Doriath beyond Sirion', Il. 249); in the Tale of Tinúviel Beren and Tinúviel 'became mighty fairies in the lands about the north of Sirion' (Il. 41). From the Hills of the Hunters it would subsequently be moved several times more.

Before leaving the Narog, we meet here for the first time in narrative writing the name Nan-Tathrin (1548), in the Lost Tales always called by its name in Eldarissa, Tasarinan (but Nantathrin occurs in the Gnomish dictionary, I. 265, entry Sirion and Dor-tathrin in the Name-list to The Fall of Gondolin, II. 346).

Far fuller than in any later account is the story in the poem of the sojourn of Túrin and his companion at Ivrin, and much that lies behind the passage in The Silmarillion (p. 209) is here revealed. In The Silmarillion Túrin drank from the water of Ivrin and was at last able to weep, and his madness passed; then he made a song for Beleg (Laer Cú Beleg, the Song of the Great Bow), 'singing it aloud heedless of peril'; and then he asked Gwindor who he was. In the Lay all these features of the story are present, somewhat differently ordered. Flinding describes to Túrin the courses of Narog and Sirion and the protection of Ulmo, and Túrin feels some return of hope (1586-7); they hasten down to the lake and drink (1599-1600); and from the meshes of misery his mind was loosed (1602). In the early night, as they sat beside their fire by the pools of Ivrin, Túrin asked Flinding his name and fate, and it was Flinding's reply that led Túrin at last to weep. Flinding fell asleep, but woke towards the end of the night to hear Túrin singing the dirge of Beleg by the edge of the lake (and here the song is called 'the Bowman's Friendship'). Túrin then himself fell asleep, and in his sleep he returned to the terrible place on the edge of Taur-na-Fuin where he slew Beleg, seeking the place of his burial and the lightning-blackened trees, and heard the voice of Beleg far off telling him to seek no longer but to take comfort in courage.

Then he woke in wonder; his wit was healed,
courage him comforted, and he called aloud
Flinding go-Fuillin, to his feet striding.

(1699-1701)

The structure of the episode in the Lay is firm and clear, the images strong and enduring. I said in the introduction to Unfinished Tales that it was grievous that my father went no further, in the later Tale of Tuor, than the coming of Tuor and Voronwë to the last gate and Tuor's sight of Gondolin across the plain. It is no less grievous that he never retold, in his later prose, the story of Túrin and Gwindor at the Lake of Ivrin. The passage in The Silmarillion is no substitute; and it is only from this poem that we can fully grasp the extremity of the disaster for Túrin, that he had killed his friend.

The description in the poem of the stealth and secrecy of the defenders of Nargothrond is derived, in concept, from the Tale (ll. 81). In the Tale the spies and watchers of the Rodothlim ... gave warning of their approach, and the folk withdrew before them, such as were abroad from their dwelling. Then they closed their doors and hoped that the strangers might not discover their caves ...

When Flinding and Túrin came to the mouths of the caves, the Rodothlim sallied and made them prisoners and drew them within their rocky halls, and they were led before the chief, Orodreth.

All this is taken up into the poem and greatly elaborated; there is also the incident of Túrin's stumbling on a root and thus being missed by the arrow aimed at him, and Flinding's cry of reproach to the unseen archers, after which they were not further molested. It is perhaps not so clear in the poem as in the Tale that the farmlands and orchards of Nargothrond were deserted lest the travellers should find the entrance to the caves, especially since a pathway plain by passing feet/was broadly beaten (1808-9) - though it is said that the throng in the great hall of Nargothrond was waiting for them (1856). Moreover, in the Tale they were not attacked. As the story is told in the poem, one might wonder why the hidden archers in the woods, if they believed Flinding's cry sufficiently to withhold their arrows, did not emerge at that point and conduct them as prisoners to the caves. The new element of the arrow shot in the woods has not, I think, been altogether assimilated to the old account of the timorous withdrawal of the Rodothlim in the hope that Túrin and Flinding would not find the entrance. But the passage describing the 'home-fields' of Nargothrond is of great interest in itself, for rarely are there references to the agriculture of the peoples of Middle-earth in the Elder Days.

The great Doors of Nargothrond are here first described – the triple doors of timber as my father imagined them are seen in his drawing of the entrance made in Dorset in the summer of 1928, and (in a different conception) their posts and lintels of ponderous stone (1830) in the watercolour of the same period referred to above (Pictures nos 33, 34).

In the Tale the fear and suspicion among the Rodothlim of Noldoli who had been slaves is attributed to 'the evil deeds of the Gnomes at Cópas Alqalunten', and this element reappears in the poem (1903–4). Nevertheless, there is no suggestion in the Tale of any serious questioning of the identity and goodwill of Flinding, greatly changed in aspect though he was, so that 'few knew him again'. In the poem, on the other hand, Orodreth emerges as hostile and formidable, and his character is carefully outlined: he is quick to anger (1973) but his wrath is cold and long-enduring (2133–4), he is seldom moved to pity (1969, 2134), grim-hearted and deep-counselled (2132–3), but capable of deep love (1970) as also of fierce hate (2135). Afterwards, as the legends developed, Orodreth underwent a steady decline into weakness and insignificance, which is very curious. Many years later, when meditating the development of the Túrin saga, my father noted that Orodreth was 'rather a weak character'; cf. the Narn, p. 160: 'he turned as he ever did to Túrin for counsel'. Ultimately he was to be displaced as the second King of Nargothrond (Unfinished Tales p. 255, note 20). But all this is a far cry from the hard and grim king in his underground hall depicted in the poem; Felagund had not yet emerged, nor the rebellious power of Celegorm and Curufin in Nargothrond (see further p. 246).

The killing of Orodreth's son Halmir the hunter by Orcs (2137-8; omitted in the C-text, p. 82) is a new element, which will reappear, though not found in The Silmarillion, where the name Halmir is borne by a ruler of the People of Haleth.

In the Tale, as I noticed in my commentary (II. 124),

Failivrin is already present, and her unrequited love for Túrin, but the complication of her former relation with Gwindor is quite absent, and she is not the daughter of Orodreth the King but of one Galweg (who was to disappear utterly).

In the poem Galweg has already disappeared, and Failivrin has become Orodreth's daughter, loved by Flinding and returning his love before his captivity; and it is her plea to her father before the assembled multitude that sways the king and leads to the admission of Flinding and Túrin to Nargothrond. Of this intervention there is probably a trace in the very condensed account in The Silmarillion (p. 209):

At first his own people did not know Gwindor, who went out young and strong, and returned now seeming as one of the aged among mortal Men, because of his torments and his labours; but Finduilas daughter of Orodreth the King knew him and welcomed him, for she had loved him before the Nirnaeth, and so greatly did Gwindor love her beauty that he named her Faelivrin, which is the gleam of the sun on the pools of Ivrin.

In the poem she is called Failivrin in A and B as written, emended or not in B to Finduilas (1724, 1938, 2130), but the name Finduilas emerges towards the end in the texts as first written (2175, 2199), and Failivrin (the glimmering sheen on the glassy pools / of Ivrin's lake) is the name by which the Elves renamed Finduilas. In the Lay as in the Tale there is no hiding of Túrin's identity, as there is in The Silmarillion, where he checked Gwindor, when Gwindor would declare his name, saying that he was Agarwaen, the Bloodstained, son of Úmarth, Ill-fate (p. 210). Finduilas (Failivrin) asks:

But are none yet nigh us that knew of yore that mighty of Men [Húrin], mark of kinship to seek and see in these sorrow-laden form and features?

(1958-61)

and then

No few were there found who had fought of old where Finweg fell in flame of swords
and Húrin Thalion had hewn the throngs, the dark Glamhoth's demon legions

(1974-7)

and they declared that Túrin's face was the face of the father new found on earth. Against the second of these passages my father wrote in the margin: 'Not so.' This is a comment on the idea that there were many Gnomes in Nargothrond who had fought in the Battle of Unnumbered Tears (see pp. 84-5); according to the later story scarcely any went from Nargothrond, and of the small company that did none came back, save Flinding/Gwindor himself. – In The Silmarillion (p. 210) Túrin is not said to be the image of his father; on the contrary, he was in truth the son of Morwen Eledhwen to look upon: dark-haired and pale-skinned, with grey eyes.

Cf. also the Narn, p. 161, where Túrin said to Arminas:

But if my head be dark and not golden, of that I am not ashamed. For I am not the first of sons in the likeness of his mother.

Húrin himself was shorter in stature than other men of his kin; in this he took after his mother's people, but in all else he was like Hador his grandfather, fair of face and golden-haired, strong in body and fiery of mood (Narn p. 57).

But Túrin was already conceived to be dark-haired in the Lay:

the black-haired boy from the beaten people (417)

and in the second version of the poem Húrin also has dark tresses (p. 97, line 88).

At the feast of welcome in the house of Fuilin Flinding's father, deep in the woods on the slopes of the Hunters' Wold (1989-92), Fuilin filled with mead a great ancient silver cup that had come from Valinor:

carved in gladness,
in woe hoarded, in waning hope
when little was left of the lore of old.
(2038-40)

It was of such things as that cup, carved with images of the folk of Faërie in the first noontide / of the Blissful Realms, of the Two Trees, and of the tower of Ing on the hill of Côr, that my father was thinking when he wrote of the treasures that Finrod Felagund brought out of Tirion (The Silmarillion p.
114); 'a solace and a burden on the road' (ibid. p. 85). – This is the first reference to the tower of Ing (Ingwë, see p. 28) in the Elvish city, whose pale pinnacle pierced the twilight,

and its crystal lamp illumined clear
with slender shaft the Shadowy Seas

(2033-5)

as afterwards the silver lamp of the Mindon Eldaliéva 'shone far out into the mists of the sea' (The Silmarillion p. 59).

According to the readings of the A and B texts at lines 2030-2 the hill on which the Elvish city was built, figured on Fuilin's cup, is Tûn, crowned by the white-walled city of Côr; and this is anomalous, since the name Tûn certainly arose as the name of the city (see ll. 292), and in the 'Sketch of the Mythology' and the 1930 'Silmarillion' Kôr is the hill and Tûn the city. In the C-text of the poem, however, these lines were changed, and the city is named Tûn (p. 82).

The elaboration at the end of the relationship of Túrin and Finduilas is an indication of the large scale on which this work was planned: seeing how much in bare narrative terms is yet to come (the fall of Nargothrond, the Dragon, the loss of Finduilas, Túrin's journey to Dor-lómin, Morwen and Nienor in Doriath and the journey to Nargothrond, the enspelling of Nienor, Túrin and Nienor among the Woodmen, the coming and death of the Dragon, and the deaths of Nienor and Túrin) it must have run to many more thousands of lines.

There remain a few isolated matters. The name Esgalduin now first appears, but the form in A and B as typed (2164), Esgaduin, is the original name. The C-text has Esgalduin (p. 82).

The Moon is seen in lines 2088-94 as a ship, the Silver Wherry, with mast, hold, and shrouds, sailing from wharves on the margin of the world; but the imagery has no real point of contact with the Ship of the Moon in the Tale of the Sun and Moon (l. 192-3).

Ulmo is now called Ylmir (first appearing by emendation in B at line 1469, but thereafter in both A and B as first written); in the 'Sketch' he first appears as Ulmo (Ylmir), thereafter as Ylmir, suggesting that at this time Ylmir was the Gnomish form of his name (in the Gnomish dictionary it was Gulma, I. 270). He is also called the Dweller in the Deep at line 1565, as he is in the later Tuor (Unfinished Tales pp. 22, 28). Flinding mentions messages from Ulmo that are heard at Ivrin, and says that Ulmo alone remembers in the Lands of Mirth / the need of the Gnomes (1531 ff.); cf. the Tale, II. 77.

Lastly may be noticed Túrin's words of parting to Beleg at his burial (1408-11), in which he foresees for him an afterlife in Valinor, in the halls of the Gods, and does not speak of a time of 'waiting'; cf. lines 1283-4, 1696-7.

THE SECOND VERSION OF THE CHILDREN OF HÚRIN

This version of the poem (II) is extant in a bundle of very rough manuscript notes (IIA), which do not constitute a complete text, and a typescript (IIB) – the twin of the typescript (IB) of the first version, done with the same distinctive purple ribbon – based on II A. That II is a later work than I is obvious from a casual scrutiny – to give a single example, the name Morwen appears thus both in IIA and IIB. As I have said (p. 4), I do not think that II is significantly later than I, and may indeed have been composed before my father ceased work on I.* Towards the end of II the amount of expansion and change from I becomes very much less, but it seems best to give II in full.

The text of the opening of the second version is complicated by the existence of two further texts, both extending from lines II. 1-94. The earlier of these is another typescript (IIC), which takes up emendations made to IIB and is itself emended: the second is a manuscript (IID) written on 'Oxford' paper (see p. 81), which takes up the changes made to IIC and introduces yet further changes. At the beginning of the poem, therefore, we have lines that exhibit a continuous development through six different texts, as for example line 18 in the first version, which is line 34 in the second:

IA Yet in host upon host the hillfiends, the orcs emended in the manuscript to:

Yet in host upon host the hillfiend orcs

IB There in host on host the hill-fiend Orcs IIA but in host on host from the hills of darkness (with from the hills swarming as an alternative)

IIB but in host on host from the hills swarming

IIC as IIB but emended on the typescript to:

and in host on host from the hills swarming

IID In host upon host from the hills swarming

The majority of the changes throughout the successive texts of the poem were made for metrical reasons – in the later revisions, especially for the removal of 'little words', to achieve an effect nearer to that of Old English lines, and to get rid of metrical aids such as -éd pronounced as a separate syllable; and as I have said, the provision of a full apparatus would be exceedingly lengthy and complex (and in places scarcely possible, for the actual texts are often more obscure than appears in print). For the second version of the poem, therefore, I give the text of IID (the last one) to its end at line 94 (since the changes from IIB though pervasive are extremely minor), and continue thereafter with IIB (the major typescript of the second version); and as before purely verbal/metrical alterations that have no bearing on the story or on names are not cited in the notes.

IIA has no title; in IIB it was TÚRIN, then THE CHILDREN OF HÚRIN, which is also the title in IIC and IID.

The 'Prologue', greatly expanded in the second version, is still given no subheading, except that in IIC it is marked 'I'; in IIB Túrin's Fostering is a section-heading, to which my father afterwards added 'II'.

THE CHILDREN OF HÚRIN

Ye Gods who girt your guarded realms with moveless pinnacles, mountains pathless, o'er shrouded shores sheer uprising of the Bay of Faëry on the borders of the World!
Ye Men unmindful of the mirth of yore, 5 wars and weeping in the worlds of old,
of Morgoth's might remembering nought!
Lo! hear what Elves with ancient harps, lingering forlorn in lands untrodden,
fading faintly down forest pathways, 10
in shadowy isles on the Shadowy Seas, sing still in sorrow of the son of Húrin, how his webs of doom were woven dark with Níniel's sorrow: names most mournful.

A! Húrin Thalion in the hosts of battle 15 was whelmed in war, when the white banners of the ruined king were rent with spears,

in blood beaten; when the blazing helm of Finweg fell in flame of swords, and his gleaming armies' gold and silver 20 shields were shaken, shining emblems in darkling tide of dire hatred, the cruel Glamhoth's countless legions, were lost and foundered – their light was quenched!
 That field yet now the folk name it 25
 Nirnaith Ornoth, Unnumbered Tears:
 the seven chieftains of the sons of Men fled there and fought not, the folk of the Elves betrayed with treason. Their troth alone unmoved remembered in the mouths of Hell 30 Thalion Erithámrod and his thanes renowned.
 Torn and trampled the triple standard of the house of Hithlum was heaped with slain.
 In host upon host from the hills swarming with hideous arms the hungry Orcs 35 enmeshed his might, and marred with wounds pulled down the proud Prince of Mithrim.
 At Bauglir's bidding they bound him living;
 to the halls of Hell neath the hills builded, to the Mountains of Iron, mournful, gloomy, 40
 they led the lord of the Lands of Mist, Húrin Thalion, to the throne of hate in halls upheld with huge pillars of black basalt. There bats wandered, worms and serpents enwound the columns; 45 there Bauglir's breast was burned within with blazing rage, balked of purpose:
 from his trap had broken Turgon the mighty, Fingolfin's son; Féanor's children,

the makers of the magic and immortal gems. 50
For Húrin standing storm unheeding, unbent in battle, with bitter laughter his axe wielded – as eagle’s wings the sound of its sweep, swinging deadly;
as livid lightning it leaped and fell, 55
as toppling trunks of trees riven his foes had fallen. Thus fought he on, where blades were blunted and in blood foundered the Men of Mithrim; thus a moment stemmed with sad remnant the raging surge 60 of ruthless Orcs, and the rear guarded, that Turgon the terrible towering in anger a pathway clove with pale falchion from swirling slaughter. Yea! his swath was plain through the hosts of Hell, as hay that is laid 65 on the lea in lines, where long and keen goes sweeping scythe. Thus seven kindreds, a countless company, that king guided through darkened dales and drear mountains out of ken of his foes – he comes no more 70 in the tale of Túrin. Triumph of Morgoth thus to doubt was turned, dreams of vengeance, thus his mind was moved with malice fathomless, thoughts of darkness, when the Thalion stood bound, unbending, in his black dungeon. 75

Said the dread Lord of Hell: ‘Dauntless Húrin, stout steel-handed, stands before me yet quick a captive, as a coward might be!
Then knows he my name, or needs be told what hope he has in the halls of iron? 80

The bale most bitter, Balrogs' torment!

Then Húrin answered, Hithlum's chieftain – his shining eyes with sheen of fire in wrath were reddened: 'O ruinous one, by fear unfettered I have fought thee long, 85
nor dread thee now, nor thy demon slaves, fiends and phantoms, thou foe of Gods!'

His dark tresses, drenched and tangled,
that fell o'er his face he flung backward, in the eye he looked of the evil Lord – 90 since that day of dread to dare his glance has no mortal Man had might of soul.

There the mind of Húrin in a mist of dark neath gaze unfathomed groped and foundered,* yet his heart yielded not nor his haughty 95 pride.

But Lungorthin Lord of Balrogs
on the mouth smote him, and Morgoth smiled:
'Nay, fear when thou feelest, when the flames lick thee

and the whistling whips thy white body and wilting flesh weal and torture!' 100

Then hung they helpless Húrin dauntless in chains by fell enchantments forged that with fiery anguish his flesh devoured, yet loosed not lips locked in silence to pray for pity. Thus prisoned saw he 105 on the sable walls the sultry glare of far-off fires fiercely burning down deep corridors and dark archways in the blind abysses of those bottomless halls;

there with mourning mingled mighty tumult 110
the throb and thunder of the thudding forges' brazen clangour; belched and spouted flaming furnaces; there faces sad through the glooms glided as the gloating Orcs their captives herded under cruel lashes. 115
Many a hopeless glance on Húrin fell, for his tearless torment many tears were spilled.

Lo! Morgoth remembered the mighty doom,
the weird of old, that the Elves in woe,
in ruin and wrack by the reckless hearts 120
of mortal Men should be meshed at last;
that treason alone of trusted friend
should master the magic whose mazes wrapped
the children of Côr, cheating his purpose, from defeat fending Fingolfin's son, 125 Turgon the terrible, and the troth-brethren the sons of Fëanor, and secret, far, homes hid darkly in the hoar forest where Thingol was throned in the Thousand Caves.

Then the Lord of Hell lying-hearted 130 to where Húrin hung hastened swiftly, and the Balrogs about him brazen-handed with flails of flame and forged iron there laughed as they looked on his lonely woe;
but Bauglir said: 'O bravest of Men, 135
'tis fate unfitting for thus fellhanded warrior warfain that to worthless friends his sword he should sell, who seek no more to free him from fetters or his fall avenge.

While shrinking in the shadows they shake	140 fearful
in the hungry hills hiding outcast their league belying, lurking faithless, he by evil lot in everlasting dungeons droopeth doomed to torment and anguish endless. That thy arms	145 unchained
I had fainer far should a falchion keen or axe with edge eager flaming wield in warfare where the wind bloweth the banners of battle – such a brand as might in my sounding smithies on the smitten anvil	150 of glowing steel to glad thy soul be forged and fashioned, yea, and fair harness and mail unmatched – than that marred with flails my mercy waiving thou shouldst moan enchained neath the brazen Balrogs' burning scourges:	155 who art worthy to win reward and honour as a captain of arms when cloven is mail and shields are shorn, when they shake the hosts of their foes like fire in fell onset.
Lo! receive my service; forswear hatred,	160 ancient enmity thus ill-counselled –
I am a mild master who remembers well his servants' deeds. A sword of terror thy hand should hold, and a high lordship as Bauglir's champion, chief of Balrogs,	165 to lead o'er the lands my loud armies, whose royal array I already furnish;
on Turgon the troll (who turned to flight and left thee alone, now leaguered fast in waterless wastes and weary mountains) 170 my wrath to wreak, and on redhanded robber-Gnomes, rebels, and roaming Elves, that forlorn witless the Lord of the World defy in their folly – they shall feel my might.

I will bid men unbind thee, and thy body 175 comfort!

Go follow their footsteps with fire and steel,
with thy sword go search their secret dwellings;
when in triumph victorious thou returnest hither,
I have hoards unthought-of – but Húrin Thalion suffered no longer silent wordless; 180 through clenched teeth in clinging pain,
'O accursed king', cried unwavering,
'thy hopes build not so high, Bauglir;
no tool am I for thy treasons vile, who tryst nor troth ever true holdest – 185 seek traitors elsewhere.'

Then returned answer
Morgoth amazed his mood hiding:
'Nay, madness holds thee; thy mind wanders;
my measureless hoards are mountains high in places secret piled uncounted 190 agelong unopened; Elfin silver and gold in the gloom there glister pale;
the gems and jewels once jealous-warded
in the mansions of the Gods, who mourn them yet, are mine, and a meed I will mete thee thence 195 of wealth to glut the Worm of Greed.'

Then Húrin, hanging, in hate answered:

'Canst not learn of thy lore when thou look'st on a
foe,
O Bauglir unblest? Bray no longer
of the things thou hast thieved from the Three 200 Kindreds!

In hate I hold thee. Thou art humbled indeed and thy might is minished if thy murderous hope and cruel counsels on a captive sad must wait, on a weak and weary man.'
To the hosts of Hell his head then he turned: 205
'Let thy foul banners go forth to battle, ye Balrogs and Orcs; let your black legions go seek the sweeping sword of Turgon.
Through the dismal dales you shall be driven wailing like startled starlings from the stooks of 210 wheat.

Minions miserable of master base,
your doom dread ye, dire disaster!
The tide shall turn; your triumph brief and victory shall vanish. I view afar the wrath of the Gods roused in anger.' 215

Then tumult awoke, a tempest wild in rage roaring that rocked the walls;
consuming madness seized on Morgoth, yet with lowered voice and leering mouth thus Thalion Erithámrod he threatened darkly: 220
'Thou hast said it! See how my swift purpose shall march to its mark unmarred of thee, nor thy aid be asked, overweening mortal mightless. I command thee gaze on my deeds of power dreadly proven. 225

Yet if little they like thee, thou must look thereon
helpless to hinder or thy hand to raise,
and thy lidless eyes lit with anguish shall not shut for ever, shorn of slumber like the Gods shall gaze there grim, tearless, 230 on the might of Morgoth and the meed he deals to fools who refuse fealty gracious.'

To Thangorodrim was the Thalion borne,
that mountain that meets the misty skies
on high over the hills that Hithlum sees 235
blackly brooding on the borders of the North.
There stretched on the stone of steepest peak in bonds unbreakable they bound him living;
there the lord of woe in laughter stood,
there cursed him for ever and his kindred all 240 that should walk and wander in woe's shadow to a doom of death and dreadful end.
There the mighty man unmoved sat,
but unveiled was his vision that he viewed afar with eyes enchanted all earthly things, 245 and the weird of woe woven darkly that fell on his folk - a fiend's torment.

NOTES

14 After this line IIB had the following:

how the golden dragon of the God of darkness wrought wrack and ruin in realms now lost - only the mighty of soul, of Men or Elves, doom can conquer, and in death only.

These lines were struck out in IIB, and do not appear in IIC, IID.

19 Cf. I. 1975:

where Finweg fell in flame of swords

with Finweg > Fingon a later pencilled change in IB. All the texts of II have Finweg (IIA Fingweg), but Fingon appears in a late pencilled emendation to IID.

26 Nirnaith Únoth IIB, IIC; Nirnaith Ornoth IID, emended in pencil to Nirnaith Arnediad. For Únoth, Ornoth in the first version see p. 79, notes to lines 1448, 1542-3. I read Ornoth here, since Arnediad is a form that arose much later.

27 All the texts of II have the chosen chieftains of the children of Men, but IID is emended in pencil to the seven chieftains of the sons of Men.

49 Fingolfin's son: see p. 21, note to line 29. Fëanor's children IID; and Fëanor's children IIA, B, C.

76 'Is it dauntless Húrin,' quoth Delu-Morgoth IIB, as in IB (line 51).

157 as a captain among them IIB as typed. Cf line 165.

Commentary on Part I of the second version

This part has been expanded to two and a half times its former length, partly through the introduction of descriptions of Angband (42-5, 105-15) – to be greatly enlarged some years later in the Lay of Leithian, and of Húrin's last stand (51-61), but chiefly through the much extended account of Morgoth's dealings with Húrin, his attempted seduction of 'the Thalion', and his great rage (not found at all in the first version) at his failure to break his will. The rewritten scene is altogether fiercer, the sense of lying, brutality, and pain (and the heroic power of Húrin's resistance) much stronger.

There are some interesting details in this opening section. Húrin's dark hair (88) has been referred to above (p. 92). The thane of Morgoth who smote him on the mouth (version I, 59) now becomes Lungorthin, Lord of Balrogs (96) – which is probably to be interpreted as 'a Balrog lord', since Gothmog, Lord or Captain of the Balrogs in The Fall of Gondolin, soon reappears in the 'Silmarillion' tradition. Notable is the passage (88-94) in which Húrin, thrusting back his long hair, looked into Morgoth's eye, and his mind in a mist of dark ... groped and foundered: the originator of the power of the eye of Glórund his servant, which this poem did not reach.

A line that occurs much later in the first version (1975)

where Finweg [> Fingon] fell in flame of swords is introduced here (19), and there is mention also of his white banners ... in blood beaten, and his blazing helm: this is ultimately the origin of the passage in The Silmarillion (pp. 193-4):

a white flame sprang up from the helm of Fingon as it was cloven ... they beat him into the dust with their maces, and his banner, blue and silver, they trod into the mire of his blood.

At line 26 is the first occurrence of Nirnaith Arnediad, but this is a hasty pencilled change to the last text (IID) and belongs to a later phase of nomenclature.

It is said that Turgon guided seven kindreds (67) out of the battle; in the tale of The Fall of Gondolin there were twelve kindreds of the Gondothlim.

Húrin is named the Prince of Mithrim (37), and his men the Men of Mithrim (59). This may suggest that the meaning of Mithrim, hitherto the name of the lake only, was being extended to the region in which the lake lay; on the earliest 'Silmarillion' map, however, this is not suggested. The land of Mithrim occurs at line 248, but the phrase was changed.

The passage in the first version (46-50) saying that Morgoth remembered well

how Men were accounted all mightless and frail
by the Elves and their kindred; how only treason
could master the magic whose mazes wrapped
the children of Corthûn is changed in the second (118-24) to

Lo! Morgoth remembered the mighty doom,
the weird of old, that the Elves in woe,
in ruin and wrack by the reckless hearts
of mortal Men should be meshed at last;
that treason alone of trusted friend
should master the magic whose mazes wrapped
the children of Côr

There has been no reference in the Lost Tales to any such ancient 'doom' or 'weird'. It is possible that the reference to 'treason' is to the 'Prophecy of the North', spoken by Mandos or his messenger as the host of the Noldor moved northward up the coast of Valinor after the Kinslaying (The Silmarillion pp. 87-8); in the earliest version of this, in the tale of The Flight of the Noldoli (l. 167), there is no trace of the idea, but it is already explicit in the 1930 'Silmarillion' that the Gnomes should pay for the deeds at Swanhaven in 'treachery and the fear of treachery among their own kindred'. On the other hand, to the mighty doom, the weird of old is ascribed also the ultimate ruin of the Elves which is to come to pass through Men; and this is not found in any version of the Prophecy of the North. This passage in the revised version of the poem is echoed in the same scene in the 1930 'Silmarillion':

Afterward Morgoth remembering that treachery or the fear of it, and especially the treachery of Men, alone would work the ruin of the Gnomes, came to Húrin ...

II

TÚRIN'S FOSTERING

Lo! the lady Morwen in the land of shadow waited in the woodland for her well-beloved,
but he came never to clasp her nigh 250 from that black battle. She abode in vain;
no tidings told her whether taken or dead
or lost in flight he lingered yet.
Laid waste his lands and his lieges slain,
and men unmindful of that mighty lord 255 in Dorlómin dwelling dealt unkindly with his wife in widowhood; she went with child, and a son must succour sadly orphaned, Túrin Thalion of tender years.
In days of blackness was her daughter born, 260 and named Nienor, a name of tears
that in language of eld is Lamentation.
Then her thoughts were turned to Thingol the Elf, and Lúthien the lissom with limbs shining, his daughter dear, by Dairon loved, 265 who Tinúviel was named both near and far,
the Star-mantled, still remembered, who light as leaf on linden tree had danced in Doriath in days ago, on the lawns had lilted in the long moonshine, 270 while deftly was drawn Dairon's music with fingers fleet from flutes of silver.
The boldest of the brave, Beren Ermabwed, to wife had won her, who once of old had vowed fellowship and friendly love 275 with Húrin of Hithlum, hero dauntless

by the marge of Mithrim's misty waters.

Thus to her son she said: 'My sweetest child,
our friends are few; thy father is gone.
Thou must fare afar to the folk of the wood, 280
where Thingol is throned in the Thousand Caves.
If he remember Morwen and thy mighty sire
he will foster thee fairly, and feats of arms, the trade he will teach thee of targe and sword, that no slave in Hithlum shall be son of Húrin. 285

A! return my Túrin when time passeth;
remember thy mother when thy manhood cometh or when sorrows snare thee.' Then silence took her, for fears troubled her trembling voice.
Heavy boded the heart of Húrin's son, 290
who unwitting of her woe wondered vaguely, yet weened her words were wild with grief and denied her not; no need him seemed.

Lo! Mailrond and Halog, Morwen's henchmen, were young of yore ere the youth of Húrin, 295 and alone of the lieges of that lord of Men now steadfast in service stayed beside her:
now she bade them brave the black mountains
and the woods whose ways wander to evil;
though Túrin be tender, to travail unused, 300 they must gird them and go. Glad they were not,
but to doubt the wisdom dared not openly of Morwen who mourned when men saw not.

Came a day of summer when the dark silence of the towering trees trembled dimly 305 to murmurs moving in the milder airs far and faintly; flecked with dancing sheen of silver and shadow-filtered sudden sunbeams were the secret glades where winds came wayward wavering softly 310 warm through the woodland's woven branches.
Then Morwen stood, her mourning hidden, by the gate of her garth in a glade of Hithlum;
at her breast bore she her babe unweaned, crooning lowly to its careless ears 315
a song of sweet and sad cadence, lest she droop for anguish. Then the doors opened, and Halog hastened neath a heavy burden, and Mailrond the old to his mistress led her gallant Túrin, grave and tearless, 320 with heart heavy as stone hard and lifeless, uncomprehending his coming torment.
There he cried with courage, comfort seeking:
'Lo! quickly will I come from the courts afar,
I will long ere manhood lead to Morwen 325
great tale of treasure and true comrades.'
He wist not the weird woven of Morgoth, nor the sundering sorrow that them swept between,
as farewells they took with faltering lips.
The last kisses and lingering words 330 are over and ended; and empty is the glen in the dark forest, where the dwelling faded in trees entangled. Then in Túrin woke to woe's knowledge his bewildered heart, that he wept blindly awakening echoes 335 sad resounding in sombre hollows, as he called: 'I cannot, I cannot leave thee.

O! Morwen my mother, why makest me go?
The hills are hateful, where hope is lost;
O! Morwen my mother, I am meshed in tears, 340 for grim are the hills and my home is gone.'
And there came his cries calling faintly
down the dark alleys of the dreary trees, that one there weeping weary on the threshold heard how the hills said 'my home is gone.' 345

* * *

The ways were weary and woven with deceit
o'er the hills of Hithlum to the hidden kingdom
deep in the darkness of Doriath's forest,
and never ere now for need or wonder
had children of Men chosen that pathway, 350 save Beren the brave who bounds knew not to his wandering feet nor feared the woods or fells or forest or frozen mountain, and few had followed his feet after.
There was told to Túrin that tale by Halog 355
that in the Lay of Leithian, Release from Bonds,
in linkéd words has long been woven,
of Beren Ermabwed, the boldhearted;
how Lúthien the lissom he loved of yore
in the enchanted forest chained with wonder - 360
Tinúviel he named her, than nightingale
more sweet her voice, as veiled in soft
and wavering wisps of woven dusk shot with starlight, with shining eyes

she danced like dreams of drifting sheen, 365
pale-twinkling pearls in pools of darkness;
how for love of Lúthien he left the woods on that quest perilous men quail to tell, thrust by Thingol o'er the thirst and terror of the Lands of Mourning; of Lúthien's tresses, 370 and Melian's magic, and the marvellous deeds that after happened in Angband's halls, and the flight o'er fell and forest pathless when Carcharoth the cruel-fangéd, the wolf-warden of the Woeful Gates, 375 whose vitals fire devoured in torment them hunted howling (the hand of Beren he had bitten from the wrist where that brave one held
the nameless wonder, the Gnome-crystal where light living was locked enchanted, 380 all hue's essence. His heart was eaten, and the woods were filled with wild madness in his dreadful torment, and Doriath's trees did shudder darkly in the shrieking glens);
how the hound of Hithlum, Huan wolf-bane, 385 to the hunt hasted to the help of Thingol, and as dawn came dimly in Doriath's woods was the slayer slain, but silent lay there Beren bleeding nigh brought to death, till the lips of Lúthien in love's despair 390 awoke him to words, ere he winged afar to the long awaiting; thence Lúthien won him, the Elf-maiden, and the arts of Melian,
her mother Mablui of the moonlit hand,
that they dwell for ever in days ageless 395

and the grass greys not in the green forest
where East or West they ever wander.
Then a song he made them for sorrow's lightening,
a sudden sweetness in the silent wood,
that is 'Light as Leaf on Linden' called, 400
whose music of mirth and mourning blended
yet in hearts does echo. This did Halog sing them:*

The grass was very long and thin,
The leaves of many years lay thick,
The old tree-roots wound out and in, 405
And the early moon was glimmering.
There went her white feet liting quick,
And Dairon's flute did bubble thin,
As neath the hemlock umbels thick
Tinúviel danced a-shimmering. 410

The pale moths lumbered noiselessly,
And daylight died among the leaves,
As Beren from the wild country Came thither wayworn sorrowing.
He peered between the hemlock sheaves, 415
And watched in wonder noiselessly
Her dancing through the moonlit leaves
And the ghostly moths a-following.

There magic took his weary feet,
And he forgot his loneliness, 420
And out he danced, unheeding, fleet,
Where the moonbeams were a-glistening.
Through the tangled woods of Elfinesse
They fled on nimble fairy feet,

And left him to his loneliness 425
In the silent forest listening,

Still hearkening for the imagined sound
Of lissom feet upon the leaves,
For music welling underground
In the dim-lit caves of Doriath. 430
But withered are the hemlock sheaves,
And one by one with mournful sound Whispering fall the beechen leaves
In the dying woods of Doriath.

He sought her wandering near and far 435
Where the leaves of one more year were strewn,
By winter moon and frosty star
With shaken light a-shivering.
He found her neath a misty moon,
A silver wraith that danced afar, 440
And the mists beneath her feet were strewn
In moonlight palely quivering.

She danced upon a hillock green
Whose grass unfading kissed her feet,
While Dairon's fingers played unseen 445
O'er his magic flute a-flickering;
And out he danced, unheeding, fleet,
In the moonlight to the hillock green:
No impress found he of her feet
That fled him swiftly flickering. 450

And longing filled his voice that called

‘Tinúviel, Tinúviel,’
And longing sped his feet enthralled
Behind her wayward shimmering.
She heard as echo of a spell 455
His lonely voice that longing called ‘Tinúviel, Tinúviel’:
One moment paused she glimmering.

And Beren caught that elfin maid
And kissed her trembling starlit eyes, 460
Tinúviel whom love delayed
In the woods of evening morrowless.
Till moonlight and till music dies
Shall Beren by the elfin maid
Dance in the starlight of her eyes 465
In the forest singing sorrowless.

Wherever grass is long and thin,
And the leaves of countless years lie thick,
And ancient roots wind out and in,
As once they did in Doriath, 470
Shall go their white feet lilting quick,
But never Dairon’s music thin
Be heard beneath the hemlocks thick
Since Beren came to Doriath.

This for hearts’ uplifting did Halog sing them 475 as the frowning fortress of the forest clasped them and nethermost night in its net caught them.
There Túrin and the twain knew torture of thirst and hunger and fear, and hideous flight from wolfriders and wandering Orcs 480 and the things of Morgoth that thronged the woods.

There numbed and wetted they had nights of waking

cold and clinging, when the creaking winds summer had vanquished and in silent valleys a dismal dripping in the distant shadows 485 ever splashed and spilt over spaces endless from rainy leaves, till arose the light greyly, grudgingly, gleaming thinly at drenching dawn. They were drawn as flies in the magic mazes; they missed their ways 490

and strayed steerless, and the stars were hid and the sun sickened. Sombre and weary had the mountains been; the marches of Doriath bewildered and wayworn wound them helpless in despair and error, and their spirits 495 founded.

Without bread or water with bleeding feet and fainting strength in the forest straying their death they deemed it to die forwandered,

when they heard a horn that hooted afar
and dogs baying. Lo! the dreary bents 500 and hushed hollows to the hunt wakened, and echoes answered to eager tongues,

for Beleg the bowman was blowing gaily, who furthest fared of his folk abroad by hill and by hollow ahunting far, 505 careless of comrades or crowded halls, as light as a leaf, as the lusty airs

as free and fearless in friendless places.

He was great of growth with goodly limbs and lithe of girth, and lightly on the ground 510

his footsteps fell as he fared towards them
all garbed in grey and green and brown.

‘Who are ye?’ he asked. ‘Outlaws, maybe, hiding, hunted, by hatred dogged?’

‘Nay, for famine and thirst we faint,’ said 515 Halog,

‘wayworn and wildered, and wot not the road.
Or hast not heard of the hills of slain,
field tear-drenchéd where in flame and terror Morgoth devoured the might and valour of the hosts of Finweg and Hithlum’s lord? 520
The Thalion Erithámrod and his thanes dauntless there vanished from the earth, whose valiant lady yet weeps in widowhood as she waits in Hithlum.
Thou lookest on the last of the lieges of Morwen, and the Thalion’s child who to Thingol’s court 525 now wend at the word of the wife of Húrin.’

Then Beleg bade them be blithe, saying:
‘The Gods have guided you to good keeping;
I have heard of the house of Húrin undaunted,
and who hath not heard of the hills of slain, 530
of Nirnaith Ornoth, Unnumbered Tears!
To that war I went not, yet wage a feud with the Orcs unending, whom mine arrows fleeting smite oft unseen swift and deadly.
I am the hunter Beleg of the hidden people; 535
the forest is my father and the fells my home.’
Then he bade them drink from his belt drawing
a flask of leather full-filled with wine

that is bruised from the berries of the burning South

-

the Gnome-folk know it, from Nogrod the Dwarves 540

by long ways lead it to the lands of the North for the Elves in exile who by evil fate the vine-clad valleys now view no more in the land of Gods. There was lit gladly a fire, with flames that flared and spluttered, 545 of wind-fallen wood that his wizard's cunning rotten, rain-sodden, to roaring life there coaxed and kindled by craft or magic;

there baked they flesh in the brands' embers;
white wheaten bread to hearts' delight 550

he haled from his wallet till hunger waned and hope mounted, but their heads were mazed by that wine of Dor-Winion that went in their veins,
and they soundly slept on the soft needles
of the tall pinetrees that towered above. 555

Then they waked and wondered, for the woods were light,

and merry was the morn and the mists rolling from the radiant sun. They soon were ready long leagues to cover. Now led by ways devious winding through the dark woodland, 560

by slade and slope and swampy thicket,
through lonely days, long-dragging nights,
they fared unfaltering, and their friend they blessed, who but for Beleg had been baffled utterly
by the magic mazes of Melian the Queen. 565

To those shadowy shores he showed the way where stilly the stream strikes before the gates of the cavernous court of the King of Doriath.

Over the guarded bridge he gained them passage, and thrice they thanked him, and thought in their hearts 570

‘the Gods are good’ – had they guessed, maybe,
what the future enfolded, they had feared to live.

To the throne of Thingol were the three now come;
there their speech well sped, and he spake them
fair,

for Húrin of Hithlum he held in honour, 575 whom Beren Ermabwed as a brother had loved and remembering Morwen, of mortals fairest,
he turned not Túrin in contempt away.

There clasped him kindly the King of Doriath,
for Melian moved him with murmured counsel, 580

and he said: ‘Lo, O son of the swifthanded, the light in laughter, the loyal in need, Húrin of Hithlum, thy home is with me,
and here shalt sojourn and be held my son.

In these cavernous courts for thy kindred’s sake 585

thou shalt dwell in dear love, till thou deemest it
time

to remember thy mother Morwen’s loneliness;
thou shalt wisdom win beyond wit of mortals,
and weapons shalt wield as the warrior-Elves,
nor slave in Hithlum shall be son of Húrin.’ 590

There the twain tarried that had tended the child, till their limbs were lightened and they longed to
fare

through dread and danger to their dear lady, so firm their faith. Yet frore and grey eld sat more heavy on the aged head 595 of Mailrond the old, and his mistress' love his might matched not, more marred by years than Halog he hoped not to home again.
Then sickness assailed him and his sight darkened:
'To Túrin I must turn my troth and fealty,' 600
he said and he sighed, 'to my sweet youngling';
but Halog hardened his heart to go.
An Elfin escort to his aid was given,
and magics of Melian, and a meed of gold,
and a message to Morwen for his mouth to 605
bear,
words of gladness that her wish was granted, and Túrin taken to the tender care of the King of Doriath; of his kindly will now Thingol called her to the Thousand Caves
to fare unfearing with his folk again, 610
there to sojourn in solace till her son be grown;
for Húrin of Hithlum was holden in mind and no might had Morgoth where Melian dwelt.

Of the errand of the Elves and of eager Halog
the tale tells not, save in time they came 615 to Morwen's threshold. There Thingol's message was said where she sat in her solitary hall,
but she dared not do as was dearly bidden,
who Nienor her nursling yet newly weaned would not leave nor be led on the long 620 marches
to adventure her frailty in the vast forest;

the pride of her people, princes ancient,
had suffered her send a son to Thingol when despair urged her, but to spend her days an almsguest of others, even Elfin kings, 625 it little liked her; and lived there yet
a hope in her heart that Húrin would come,
and the dwelling was dear where he dwelt of old;
at night she would listen for a knock at the doors
or a footstep falling that she fondly knew. 630
Thus she fared not forth; thus her fate was woven.
Yet the thanes of Thingol she thanked nobly,
nor her shame showed she, how shorn of glory
to reward their wending she had wealth too scant,
but gave them in gift those golden things 635 that last lingered, and led they thence a helm of Húrin once hewn in wars when he battled with Beren as brother and comrade against ogres and Orcs and evil foes.
Grey-gleaming steel, with gold adorned 640 wrights had wrought it, with runes graven of might and victory, that a magic sat there and its wearer warded from wound or death, whoso bore to battle brightly shining dire dragon-headed its dreadful crest. 645
This Thingol she bade and her thanks receive.

Thus Halog her henchman to Hithlum came,
but Thingol's thanes thanked her lowly and girt them to go, though grey winter enmeshed the mountains and the moaning 650 woods,
for the hills hindered not the hidden people.

Lo! Morwen's message in a month's journey, so speedy fared they, was spoken in Doriath.
 For Morwen Melian was moved to ruth, but courteously the king that casque 655 received,
 her golden gift, with gracious words,
 who deeply delved had dungeons filled with elvish armouries of ancient gear, yet he handled that helm as his hoard were scant:
 'That head were high that upheld this thing 660 with the token crowned, the towering crest to Dorlómin dear, the dragon of the North, that Thalion Erithámrod the thrice renowned
 oft bore into battle with baleful foes.
 Would that he had worn it to ward his head 665 on that direst day from death's handstroke!'

Then a thought was thrust into Thingol's heart, and Túrin was called and told kindly that his mother Morwen a mighty thing
 had sent to her son, his sire's heirloom, 670 o'er-written with runes by wrights of yore
 in dark dwarfland in the deeps of time,
 ere Men to Mithrim and misty Hithlum o'er the world wandered; it was worn aforesime by the father of the fathers of the folk of 675 Húrin,
 whose sire Gumlin to his son gave it
 ere his soul severed from his sundered heart -
 'Tis Telchar's work of worth untold, its wearer warded from wound or magic,
 from glaive guarded or gleaming axe. 680
 Now Húrin's helm hoard till manhood to battle bids thee, then bravely don it, go wear it well!' Woeful-hearted did Túrin touch it but take it not, too weak to wield that mighty gear, 685 and his mind in mourning for Morwen's answer was mazed and darkened.

Thus many a day
it came to pass in the courts of Thingol for twelve years long that Túrin lived.
But seven winters their sorrows had laid 690 on the son of Húrin when that summer to the world came glad and golden with grievous parting;
nine years followed of his forest-nurture,
and his lot was lightened, for he learned at whiles
from faring folk what befell in Hithlum, 695
and tidings were told by trusty Elves
how Morwen his mother knew milder days and easement of evil, and with eager voice all Nienor named the Northern flower, the slender maiden in sweet beauty 700 now graceful growing. The gladder was he then and hope yet haunted his heart at whiles.
He waxed and grew and won renown
in all lands where Thingol as lord was held for his stoutness of heart and his strong body. 705 Much lore he learned and loved wisdom,
but fortune followed him in few desires;
oft wrong and awry what he wrought turnéd,
what he loved he lost, what he longed for failed, and full friendship he found not with ease, 710
nor was lightly loved, for his looks were sad;

he was gloomy-hearted and glad seldom
for the sundering sorrow that seared his youth.

On manhood's threshold he was mighty-thewed in the wielding of weapons; in weaving song 715
he had a minstrel's mastery, but mirth was not in it, for he mourned the misery of the Men of Hithlum.

Yet greater his grief grew thereafter
when from Hithlum's hills he heard no more and no traveller told him tidings of Morwen. 720
For those days were drawing to the doom of the Gnomes

and the power of the Prince of the pitiless kingdom,
of the grim Glamhoth, was grown apace,
till the lands of the North were loud with their noise, and they fell on the folk with fire and 725
slaughter

who bent not to Bauglir or the borders passed
of dark Dorlómin with its dreary pines that Hithlum was called by the unhappy people.
There Morgoth shut them in the Shadowy Mountains,
fenced them from Faërie and the folk of the 730
wood.

Even Beleg fared not so far abroad
as once was his wont, for the woods were filled with the armies of Angband and with evil deeds, and murder walked on the marches of Doriath;
only the mighty magic of Melian the Queen 735
yet held their havoc from the hidden people.

To assuage his sorrow and to sate his rage, for his heart was hot with the hurts of his folk,

then Húrin's son took the helm of his sire
and weapons weighty for the wielding of men, 740
and he went to the woods with warrior-Elves, and far in the forest his feet led him
into black battle yet a boy in years.
Ere manhood's measure he met and he slew Orcs of Angband and evil things 745
that roamed and ravened on the realm's borders.
There hard his life, and hurts he lacked not,
the wounds of shaft and the wavering sheen of the sickle scimitars, the swords of Hell, the bloodfain blades on black anvils 750 in Angband smithied, yet ever he smote unfey, fearless, and his fate kept him.
Thus his prowess was proven and his praise was noised
and beyond his years he was yielded honour,
for by him was holden the hand of ruin 755
from Thingol's folk, and Thû feared him,
and wide wandered the word of Túrin:
'Lo! we deemed as dead the dragon of the North,
but high o'er the host its head uprises, its wings are spread! Who has waked this 760 spirit
and the flame kindled of its fiery jaws?
Or is Húrin of Hithlum from Hell broken?'
And Thû who was throned asthane mightiest neath Morgoth Bauglir, whom that master bade
'go ravage the realm of the robber Thingol 765
and mar the magic of Melian the Queen', even Thû feared him, and his thanes trembled.

One only was there in war greater, more high in honour in the hearts of the Elves than Túrin son of Húrin, tower of Hithlum, 770 even the hunter Beleg of the hidden people, whose father was the forest and the fells his home;
to bend whose bow, Balthronding named,
that the black yewtree once bore of yore,
had none the might; unmatched in knowledge 775
of the woods' secrets and the weary hills.
He was leader beloved of the light companies
all garbed in grey and green and brown,
the archers arrowfleet with eyes piercing,
the scouts that scoured scorning danger 780
afar o'er the fells their foemen's lair,
and tales and tidings timely won them
of camps and councils, of comings and goings,
all the movements of the might of Morgoth Bauglir.
Thus Túrin, who trusted to targe and sword, 785
who was fain of fighting with foes well seen,
where shining swords made sheen of fire, and his corslet-clad comrades-in-arms
were snared seldom and smote unlooked-for.

Then the fame of the fights on the far 790
marches
was carried to the courts of the king of Doriath,
and tales of Túrin were told in his halls,
of the bond and brotherhood of Beleg the ageless with the blackhaired boy from the beaten people.
Then the king called them to come before him 795
did Orc-raids lessen in the outer lands ever and often unasked to hasten,

to rest them and revel and to raise awhile
in songs and lays and sweet music the memory of the mirth ere the moon was 800 old,
when the mountains were young in the morning of the world.

On a time was Túrin at his table seated,
and Thingol thanked him for his thriving deeds;
there was laughter long and the loud clamour
of a countless company that quaffed the 805 mead
and the wine of Dor-Winion that went ungrudged
in their golden goblets; and goodly meats
there burdened the boards neath blazing torches in those high halls set that were hewn of stone.
There mirth fell on many; there minstrels 810 clear
did sing them songs of the city of Côr that Taingwethil towering mountain o'ershadowed sheerly, of the shining halls
where the great gods sit and gaze on the world
from the guarded shores of the gulf of Faërie. 815
One sang of the slaying at the Swans' Haven and the curse that had come on the kindreds since

Here the typescript IIB ends abruptly, in the middle of a page; the manuscript IIA has already ended at line 767.

NOTES

The first page of the typescript of this section of the poem, covering lines 248–95, is duplicated, the one version (b) taking up changes made to the other (a) and itself receiving further changes. There is no corresponding text of IIA until line 283.

- 248 in the land of Mithrim (a), and (b) as typed. The emendation in (b) reverts to the reading of the first version (105), in the Land of Shadows.
- 265 Dairon's sister (a), and (b) as typed.
- 266–8 These three lines were inserted in (b), with change of who had danced 269 to had danced. See below, Note on the poem 'Light as Leaf on Lindentree'.
- 273 Ermabweth (a), and (b) as typed. The emendation in (b) to Ermabwed reverts to the form of the name in the Lost Tales and in the first version of the poem (121).
- 274–8 As typed, (a) was virtually identical with the first version lines 122–5. This was then changed to read:
- did win her to wife, who once of old fellowship had vowed and friendly love
Elf with mortal, even Egnor's son with Húrin of Hithlum, hunting often by the marge of Mithrim's misty waters.
Thus said she to her son ...
- This passage was then typed in (b), with change of hunting often to hero dauntless. Subsequently the line Elf with mortal, even Egnor's son was struck out, and other minor changes made to give the text printed.

294 Mailrond: Mailgond IIA, IIB; I read Mailrond in view of the emendations at lines 319, 596.

319 Mailrond: Mailgond IIA, and IIB as typed, emended in pencil to Mailrond; similarly at line 596.

356 Release from Bondage IIB as typed (the change to Release from Bonds was made for metrical reasons). The reference to the Lay of Leithian is not in IIA, but the manuscript is here so scrappy and disjointed as to be of no service.

358– These nine lines are typed on a slip 66 pasted into IIB, replacing the following which were struck out:

how Lúthien the lissom he loved of yore
in the enchanted forest chained with wonder as she danced like dreams of drifting whiteness of shadows shimmering shot with moonlight;

In the first line (358) of the inserted slip the boldhearted is an emendation of brave undaunted; and above Ermabwed is written (later, in pencil) Er(h)amion.

374 Carcharoth : Carcharolch IIA, and IIB

as typed.

398– These five lines are typed on a slip 402 pasted into IIB at the same time as that giving lines 358–66, but in this case there was nothing replaced in the original typescript. Line 400 as typed read:

that 'Light as Leaf on Lind' is called emended to the reading given.

Beneath the five typed lines my father wrote: 'Here follow verses "Light as leaf on linden-tree".'

Note on the poem 'Light as Leaf on Lindentree'

Lines 266–8 (see note above) were clearly added to the typescript at the same time as the two pasted-in slips (giving lines 358–66 and 398–402), in view of line 268 who light as leaf on linden tree.

This poem, here to be inset into the Lay of the Children of Húrin, is found in three typescripts, here referred to as (a), (b), and (c), together with a small manuscript page giving reworkings of the penultimate stanza. These typescripts were made with the same purple ribbon used for the texts IB and IIB of the Lay and obviously belong to the same period.

(a), earliest of the three, had no title as typed: the title Light as leaf on lind was written in ink, and before the poem begins there is written also in ink:

'Light was Tinúviel as leaf on lind light as a feather in the laughing wind.'
Tinúviel! Tinúviel!

On this typescript my father wrote some notes on the poem's dating: 'first beginnings Oxford 1919–20 Alfred St.', 'Leeds 1923, retouched 1924'. (a) is the 1923 version; it differs from the later (1924) only in the penultimate stanza, on which see note to lines 459–66 below.

(b) again has no title as typed, but As Light as Leaf on Lindentree was written in ink. This begins with 15 lines of alliterative verse:

In the Lay of Leithian, Release from Bondage

in linkéd words has long been wrought of Beren Ermabwed, brave, undaunted;
how Lúthien the lissom he loved of yore
in the enchanted forest chained in wonder.

5

Tinúviel he named her, than nightingale
more sweet her voice, as veiled in soft
and wavering wisps of woven dusk
shot with starlight, with shining eyes
she danced like dreams of drifting sheen,

10

pale-twinkling pearls in pools of darkness.

And songs were raised for sorrow's lightening,
a sudden sweetness in a silent hour,
that 'Light as Leaf on Linden-tree' were called – here caught a cadent echo.

15

(c) has the typed title As Light as Leaf on Lind, the last word emended to Linden-tree. This has only the text of the poem, without the alliterative introduction; and the text is identical to that of (b).

It will be seen that of the alliterative verses in (b) lines 1–2 are very close to lines 356–7 of the Lay (which were original lines in the typescript, not inserted later):

(There was told to Túrin that tale by Halog)
that in the Lay of Leithian, Release from Bonds [< Bondage],
in linkéd words has long been woven

while lines 3–11 are identical with those on the first pasted-in slip, 358–66 (as typed: the boldhearted in line 358 is an emendation from brave undaunted). Further, lines 12–15 are close to those on the second pasted-in slip, 398–402:

Then a song he made them for sorrow's lightening,
a sudden sweetness in a silent hour,
that is 'Light as Leaf on Linden' called,
whose music of mirth and mourning blended
yet in hearts does echo. This did Halog sing them:

The order of events is very difficult to determine, but the key is probably to be found in the fact that lines 356–7 are found in IIB as originally typed, not in the pasted-in insertion.

I think (or perhaps rather guess) that my father composed an alliterative continuation of 13 lines (beginning of Beren Ermabwed, brave undaunted) as an introduction to the poem Light as Leaf on Lindentree; and then, at the same time as he typed text (b) of this poem, with the alliterative head-piece, he added them to the typescript of the Lay already in existence.

Light as Leaf on Lindentree was published in The Gryphon (Leeds University), New Series, Vol. VI, no. 6, June 1925, p. 217. It is here preceded by nine lines of alliterative verse, beginning and continuing exactly as in (b) above (and in the text of the Lay) as far as in pools of darkness; the last four lines do not appear. In his cutting from The Gryphon my father changed broken-hearted (which is obviously a mere printer's error) to the boldhearted (as in the Lay, 358); changed the title to As Light as Leaf on Lindentree; and wrote Erchamion above Ermabwed (see note to lines 358-66).

'Tis of Beren Ermabwed brokenhearted

The text of the inserted poem given in the body of the Lay is that published, which is identical to that of the typescripts (b) and (c). My father made a very few changes to (c) afterwards (i.e. after the poem had been printed) and these are given in the notes that follow, as also are the earlier forms of the penultimate verse.

It may finally be observed that if my deductions are correct the introduction in the Lay of the reference to the Lay of Leithian and the outline of the story told by Halog preceded the publication of Light as Leaf on Lindentree in June 1925.

419 magic > wonder, later emendation made to the typescript (c) of Light as Leaf on Lindentree after the poem was published.

424 fairy > elvish, see note to 419.
459, elfin > elvish, see note to 419.
464
459– In the typescript (a) this penultimate 66 stanza reads as follows:

And Beren caught the elfin maid
And kissed her trembling starlit eyes:
The elfin maid that love delayed
In the days beyond our memory.
Till moon and star, till music dies,
Shall Beren and the elfin maid
Dance to the starlight of her eyes
And fill the woods with glamoury.

The single manuscript page (bearing the address 'The University, Leeds') has two versions of the stanza intermediate between that in (a) and the final form. The first of these reads:

Ere Beren caught the elfin maid
And kissed her trembling starlit eyes
Tinúviel, whom love delayed
In the woven woods of Nemorie
In the tangled trees of Tramorie.
Till music and till moonlight dies
Shall Beren by the elfin maid
Dance in the starlight of her eyes
And fill the woods with glamoury.

Other variants are suggested for lines 4 and 8:

In the woven woods of Glamoury

...

and O'er the silver glades of Amoury Ere the birth of mortal memory

...

And fill the woods with glamoury.

I can cast no light on these names.

The second version advances towards the final form, with for lines 4 and 8 of the stanza:

In the land of laughter sorrowless
> In spells enchanted sorrowless

...

In eve unending morrowless

The lines finally achieved are also written here. This rewriting of the penultimate stanza is unquestionably the 1924 'retouching' referred to in the note on typescript (a) (see p. 120).

- 475 did Halog sing them: did Halog recall IIB as typed. The emendation was made at the same time as the insertion of Light as Leaf on Lindentree; as originally written the line followed on 397, at the end of Halog's story.
- 520 Finweg IIB unemended; see note to second version line 19.
- 531 Nirnaith Únoth IIA, and IIB as typed. See note to second version line 26.
- 551 haled underlined in IIB and an illegible word substituted, perhaps had.
- 576 Ermabweth IIA, and IIB as typed. Cf. line 273.
- 596 Mailrond: see note to line 319.
- 658 elfin IIA, elvish IIB as typed.
- 767 The manuscript IIA ends here.

- 811 Côr emended in pencil to Tûn, but Tûn later struck out. In the first version (IB, line 430) the same, but there the emendation Tûn not struck out.
- 812 Taingwethil: Tengwethil as typed. In the first version IB introduces Tain- for Ten- at lines 431, 636, but at line 1409 IB has Ten- for IA Tain-. A later pencilled note here says: 'English Tindbrething' (see Commentary, p. 127).

Commentary on Part II of the second version 'Túrin's Fostering'

(i) References to the story of Beren and Lúthien

In this second part of the second version the major innovation is of course the introduction of the story of Beren and Lúthien, told to Túrin by his guardian Halog when they were lost in the forest, at once reminiscent of Aragorn's telling of the same story to his companions on Weathertop before the attack of the Ringwraiths (The Fellowship of the Ring I. 11); and with the further introduction of the poem Light as Leaf on Lindentree, the original form of the very song that Aragorn chanted on Weathertop, we realise that the one scene is actually the precursor of the other.

At line 264 (an original, not an interpolated line) is the first appearance of the name Lúthien for Thingol's daughter, so that Tinúviel becomes her acquired name (given to her by Beren, line 361). The suggestion of the interpolated lines 266–7 Tinúviel meant 'Starmantled', which seems likely enough (see I. 269, entry Tinwë Linto; the Gnomish dictionary, contemporary with the Lost Tales, rather surprisingly gives no indication of the meaning of Tinúviel).

On the other hand, in the interpolated line 361 the suggestion is equally clear that it meant 'Nightingale'. It is difficult to explain this.*

The original reading at line 265, Dairon's sister, goes back to the Tale of Tinúviel, where Dairon was the son of Tinwelint (ll. 10).

I noted earlier (p. 25) that lines 178–9 in the first version

and never ere now for need or wonder
had children of Men chosen that pathway

show that Beren was still an Elf, not a Man; but while these lines are retained without change in the second version (349–50) their meaning is reversed by the new line that immediately follows – save Beren the brave, which shows equally clearly that Beren was a Man, not an Elf. At this time my father was apparently in two minds on this subject. At lines 273 ff. of the second version (referring to Beren's friendship with Húrin) he originally repeated lines 122–5 of the first, which make no statement on the matter; but in the first revision of this passage (given in the note to lines 274–8) he explicitly wrote that Beren was an Elf:

(Beren) who once of old fellowship had vowed and friendly love
Elf with mortal, even Egnor's son with Húrin of Hithlum ...

Since this is a rewriting of the original text of IIB it is presumably a withdrawal from the idea (that Beren was a Man) expressed in lines 349–50; while the further rewriting of this passage, getting rid of the line Elf with mortal, even Egnor's son, presumably represents a return to it.

In Halog's recounting of the story of Beren and Lúthien there are some apparent differences from that told in the Tale of the Nauglafring and the Lay of Leithian. The reference to Melian's magic in line 371 is presumably to Melian's knowledge of where Beren was; cf. the Tale of Tinúviel II. 17: ““O Gwendeling, my mother,” said she, “tell me of thy magic, if thou canst, how doth Beren fare ...”” A probable explanation of the mention later in this passage of the arts of Melian (393), in association with Lúthien’s winning Beren back from death, will be given later. But in no other version of the story is there any suggestion that Carcharoth ‘hunted’ Beren and Lúthien (377) after he had devoured Beren’s hand holding the Silmaril – indeed, the reverse: from the Tale of Tinúviel (II. 34) ‘Then did Tinúviel and Beren flee like the wind from the gates, yet was Karkaras far before them’ to The Silmarillion (p. 181) ‘Howling he fled before them’. (The form Carcharoth now first appears, by emendation of Carcharolch, which occurs nowhere else; in the Tale of Tinúviel the forms are Karkaras and (in the second version) Carcaras.)

More important, lines 395–7

that they dwell for ever in days ageless
and the grass greys not in the green forest
where East or West they ever wander seems to represent a conception of the second lives of Beren and Lúthien notably different from that in the Tale of the Nauglafring (II. 240), where the doom of mortality that Mandos had spoken fell swiftly upon them (as also in The Silmarillion, p. 236):

nor this time did those twain fare the road together, but when yet was the child of those twain, Dior the Fair, a little one, did Tinúviel slowly fade ... and she vanished in the woods, and none have seen her dancing ever there again. But Beren searched all the lands of Hithlum and Artanor ranging after her; and never has any of the Elves had more loneliness than his, or ever he too faded from life ...

However this matter is to be interpreted, the lines in the Lay are clearly to be associated with the end of Light as Leaf on

Lindentree:

Till moonlight and till music dies
Shall Beren by the elfin maid
Dance in the starlight of her eyes
In the forest singing sorrowless.

Compare the end of the song that Aragorn sang on Weathertop:

The Sundering Seas between them lay,
And yet at last they met once more,
And long ago they passed away
In the forest singing sorrowless.

(ii) The Dragon-helm and Húrin's ancestors

The elder of Túrin's guardians, still Gumlin in the first version, is now named (Mailgond >) Mailrond; and Gumlin becomes the name of Húrin's father, who has not been even mentioned before (other than in the reference in the first version to the Dragon-helm being Húrin's heirloom, 318). In the second version the Dragon-helm was worn aforetime

by the father of the fathers of the folk of Húrin, whose sire Gumlin to his son gave it
ere his soul severed from his sundered heart.

(674-7)

The last line suggests that a story of Húrin's father had already come into existence; and line 675 suggests a long line of ancestors behind Húrin – as also does line 622, the pride of her people, princes ancient, behind Morwen. It is hard to know how my father at this time conceived the earlier generations of Men; and the question must be postponed.

The Dragon-helm itself now begins to gather a history: it was made in dark dwarfland in the deeps of time,

ere Men to Mithrim and misty Hithlum o'er the world wandered

(672-4)

and was the work of Telchar (678), now named for the first time. But there is still no indication of the significance attaching to the dragon-crest.

Lines 758-62 (Lo! we deemed as dead the dragon of the North ... Or is Húrin of Hithlum from Hell broken?), to which there is nothing corresponding in the first version, clearly foreshadows the Narn, p. 79:

and word ran through the woods, and was heard far beyond Doriath, that the Dragon-helm of Dor-lómin was seen again. Then many wondered, saying: 'Can the spirit of Hador or of Galdor the Tall return from death; or has Húrin of Hithlum escaped indeed from the pits of Angband?'

(iii) Miscellaneous Matters

The curious references to Beleg in the first version ('son of the wilderness who wist no sire', see p. 25) reappear in the second, but in a changed form, and at one of the occurrences put into Beleg's own mouth: the forest is my father 536, cf. 772. Beleg the ageless is retained in the second version (793), and at lines 544 ff. he shows a Gandalf-like quality of being able to make fire in wet wood, with his wizard's cunning (cf. The Fellowship of the Ring II. 3).

The great bow of Beleg is now at last named: Balthronding (773; later Belthronding).

We learn now that the strong wine of Dor-Winion that Beleg gave to the travellers and which was drunk at the fateful feast in the Thousand Caves was brought to the Northern lands from Nogrod by Dwarves (540-1); and also that there was viticulture in Valinor (543-4), though after the accounts of life in the halls of Tulkas and Oromë in the tale of The Coming of the Valar (l. 75) this causes no surprise – indeed it is said that Nessa wife of Tulkas bore ‘goblets of the goodliest wine’, while Meássë went among the warriors in her house and ‘revived the fainting with strong wine’ (l. 78).

An interesting detail in the second account of Túrin’s reception in Doriath, not found again, is that Melian played a part in the king’s graciousness:

for Melian moved him with murmured counsel.
(580)

From the feast at which Túrin slew Orgof the songs of the sons of Ing of the first version (line 421) have now disappeared.

The chronology of Túrin’s youth is slightly changed in the second version. In the first, as in the Tale (see p. 25), Túrin spent seven years in Doriath while tidings still came from Morwen (line 333); this now becomes nine years (line 693), as in The Silmarillion (p. 199).

Lastly, at line 812 a pencilled note against the name Taingwethil (Taniquetil) says ‘English Tindbrenting’. This name is found in notes on the Old English forms of Elvish names (see p. 87), Tindbrenting þe pa Brega Taniquetil nemnað (‘Tindbrenting which the Valar name Taniquetil’; Old English bregu ‘king, lord, ruler’ = ‘Vala’). The name is perhaps to be derived from Old English tind ‘projecting spike’ (Modern English tine) and brenting (a derivative of brant ‘steep, lofty’), here used in an unrecorded sense (brenting occurs only once in recorded Old English, in Beowulf, where it means ‘ship’).

Verses associated with The Children of Húrin

There is a poem found in three manuscripts, all on 'Oxford' paper (see p. 81), in which my father developed elements in the passage lines 2082-2113 in The Children of Húrin to a short independent work. The first text has no title, and reads:

The high summer
waned to autumn, and western gales the leaves loosened from labouring boughs.
The feet of the forest in fading gold and burnished brown were buried 5 deeply;
a restless rustle down the roofless aisles sighed and whispered. The Silver Wherry, the sailing moon with slender mast
was filled with fires as of furnace hot;
its hold hoarded the heats of summer, 10 its shrouds were shaped of shining flame uprising ruddy o'er the rim of Evening by the misty wharves on the margin of the world.
Then winter hastened and weathers hardened,
and sleet and snow and slanting 15 rain
from glowering heaven, grey and sunless,
whistling whiplash whirled by tempest,
the lands forlorn lashed and tortured:
floods were loosened, the fallow waters sweeping seaward, swollen, angry, 20
filled with flotsam, foaming, turbid passed in tumult. The tempest failed:

frost descended from the far mountains,
steel-cold and still. Stony-glinting
icehung evening was opened wide, 25
a dome of crystal over deep silence,
the windless wastes, the woods standing frozen phantoms under flickering stars.

Against deeply in line 5 is given thickly as an alternative reading, and against Wherry in line 7 is given vessel.

The first 13 lines of this are almost identical to 2082-94 in the Lay, with only a few slight changes (mostly for the common purpose in my father's revisions of his alliterative verse of making the lines more taut). Then follow in lines 14-16 adaptations of 2102-4; 17 is a new line; 18 contains a part of 2119; 19-22a are based on 2106-9a; 226-24 are new; and 25-8 are almost the same as 2110-13.

The second version of the poem bears the title Storm over Narog, and is much developed. This version as written retained lines 14-15 from the first, but they were changed and expanded to three; and the third text, entitled Winter comes to Nargothrond, is a copy of the second with this alteration and one or two other very slight changes. I give the third text here.

Winter comes to Nargothrond

The summer slowly in the sad forest waned and faded. In the west arose winds that wandered over warring seas.
Leaves were loosened from labouring
boughs:
fallow-gold they fell, and the feet 5 buried

of trees standing tall and naked, rustling restlessly down roofless aisles, shifting and drifting.

The shining vessel
of the sailing moon with slender mast, with shrouds shapen of shimmering flame, 10

uprose ruddy on the rim of Evening by the misty wharves on the margin of the world.

With winding horns winter hunted in the weeping woods, wild and ruthless; sleet came slashing, and slanting hail 15

from glowering heaven grey and sunless,
whistling whiplash whirled by tempest.
The floods were freed and fallow waters
sweeping seaward, swollen, angry,
filled with flotsam, foaming, turbid, 20
passed in tumult. The tempest died.

Frost descended from far mountains
steel-cold and still. Stony-glinting
icehung evening was opened wide,
a dome of crystal over deep silence, 25
over windless wastes and woods standing as frozen phantoms under flickering stars.

On the back of Winter comes to Nargothrond are written the following verses, which arose from lines 1554–70 of the Lay. The poem has no title.

With the seething sea Sirion's waters, green streams gliding into grey furrows, murmurous mingle. There mews gather, seabirds assemble in solemn council, whitewinged hosts whining sadly 5 with countless voices in a country of sand:
plains and mountains of pale yellow sifting softly in salt breezes, sere and sunbleached. At the sea's margin a shingle lies, long and shining 10 with pebbles like pearl or pale marble:
when the foam of waves down the wind flieth
in spray they sparkle; splashed at evening in the moon they glitter; moaning, grinding,
in the dark they tumble; drawing and 15 rolling,
when strongbreasted storm the streams driveth
in a war of waters to the walls of land.
When the Lord of Ocean his loud trumpets in the abyss bloweth to battle sounding, longhaired legions on lathered 20 horses
with backs like whales, bridles spuming, charge there snorting, champing seaweed;
hurled with thunder of a hundred drums
they leap the bulwarks, burst the leaguer, through the sandmountains sweeping 25 madly
up the river roaring roll in fury.

The last three lines were later placed within brackets.

It may be mentioned here that there exists a poem in rhyming couplets entitled The Children of Húrin. This extends only to 170 lines and breaks off abruptly, after a short prologue based on the opening of the later version of the alliterative Lay and an incomplete second section titled 'The Battle of Unnumbered Tears and Morgoth's Curse'. This poem comes however from a rather later period - approximately the time of the abandonment of the Lay of Leithian in the same metre, in the early 1930s, and I do not give it here.

II

POEMS EARLY ABANDONED

During his time at the University of Leeds my father embarked on five distinct poetical works concerned with the matter of the mythology; but three of these went no further than the openings. This chapter treats each of them in turn.

(i) The Flight of the Noldoli

There do not seem to be any certain indications of the date of this brief poem in alliterative verse in relation to The Children of Húrin (though it is worth noticing that already in the earliest of the three texts of The Flight of the Noldoli Fëanor's son Cranthir is so named, whereas this form only arose by emendation of Cranthor in the typescript text of the Lay (line 1719)). However, both from its general air and from various details it can be seen that it comes from the same time; and since it seems unlikely that (on the one hand) my father would have embarked on a new poem in alliterative verse unless he had laid the other aside, or that (on the other) he would have returned to this mode once he was fully engaged on a long poem in rhyming couplets, I think it very probable that The Flight of the Noldoli comes from the earlier part of 1925 (see pp. 3, 81)

Each of the three manuscripts of the poem (A, B, and C) is differently titled: A has The Flight of the Gnomes as sung in the Halls of Thingol; B (pencilled in later) Flight of the Gnomes; C The Flight of the Noldoli from Valinor. A has emendations that are taken up in the text of B, and B has emendations taken up in C; almost all are characteristic metrical/verbal rearrangements, as for example in line 17:

A in anguish mourning, emended to the reading of B;
B and in anguish mourn, emended to the reading of C;
C mourning in anguish.

As generally in this book, earlier variants that have no bearing on names or story are not cited. Each text ends at the same point, but three further lines are roughly written in the margin of A (see note to line 146).

I give now the text of the third version, C.

THE FLIGHT OF THE NOLDOLI FROM VALINOR

A! the Trees of Light, tall and shapely, gold and silver, more glorious than the sun, than the moon more magical, o'er the meads of the Gods
their fragrant frith and flowerladen gardens gleaming, once gladly shone. 5
In death they are darkened, they drop their leaves from blackened branches bled by Morgoth and Ungoliant the grim the Gloomweaver.
In spider's form despair and shadow a shuddering fear and shapeless night 10 she weaves in a web of winding venom that is black and breathless. Their branches fail, the light and laughter of their leaves are quenched.
Mirk goes marching, mists of blackness, through the halls of the Mighty hushed and 15 empty,
the gates of the Gods are in gloom mantled.

Lo! the Elves murmur mourning in anguish, but no more shall be kindled the mirth of Côr in the winding ways of their walled city, towercrownëd Tûn, whose twinkling lamps 20 are drowned in darkness. The dim fingers of fog come floating from the formless waste and sunless seas. The sound of horns, of horses' hooves hastening wildly in hopeless hunt, they hear afar, 25 where the Gods in wrath those guilty ones through mournful shadow, now mounting as a tide o'er the Blissful Realm, in blind dismay pursue unceasing. The city of the Elves is thickly thronged. On threadlike stairs 30 carven of crystal countless torches stare and twinkle, stain the twilight and gleaming balusters of green beryl.
A vague rumour of rushing voices, as myriads mount the marble paths, 35
there fills and troubles those fair places wide ways of Tûn and walls of pearl.

Of the Three Kindreds to that clamorous throng
are none but the Gnomes in numbers drawn.
The Elves of Ing to the ancient halls 40 and starry gardens that stand and gleam upon Timbrenting towering mountain that day had climbed to the cloudy-domed mansions of Manwë for mirth and song.
There Bredhil the Blessed the bluementled, 45 the Lady of the heights as lovely as the snow in lights gleaming of the legions of the stars, the cold immortal Queen of mountains, too fair and terrible too far and high for mortal eyes, in Manwë's court 50 sat silently as they sang to her.

The Foam-riders, folk of waters, Elves of the endless echoing beaches,
of the bays and grottoes and the blue lagoons, of silver sands sown with moonlit, 55 starlit, sunlit, stones of crystal, paleburning gems pearls and opals, on their shining shingle, where now shadows groping
clutched their laughter, quenched in mourning their mirth and wonder, in amaze wandered 60 under cliffs grown cold calling dimly, or in shrouded ships shuddering waited for the light no more should be lit for ever.

But the Gnomes were numbered by name and kin, marshalled and ordered in the mighty square 65 upon the crown of Côr. There cried aloud the fierce son of Finn. Flaming torches he held and whirled in his hands aloft, those hands whose craft the hidden secret knew, that none Gnome or mortal 70 hath matched or mastered in magic or in skill.
'Lo! slain is my sire by the sword of fiends, his death he has drunk at the doors of his hall and deep fastness, where darkly hidden the Three were guarded, the things 75 unmatched

that Gnome and Elf and the Nine Valar can never remake or renew on earth, recarve or rekindle by craft or magic,
not Fëanor Finn's son who fashioned them of yore – the light is lost whence he lit them first, 80
the fate of Faërie hath found its hour

Thus the witless wisdom its reward hath earned of the Gods' jealousy, who guard us here to serve them, sing to them in our sweet cages, to contrive them gems and jewelled trinkets, 85 their leisure to please with our loveliness, while they waste and squander work of ages, nor can Morgoth master in their mansions sitting at countless councils. Now come ye all, who have courage and hope! My call harken 90 to flight, to freedom in far places!

The woods of the world whose wide mansions
yet in darkness dream drowned in slumber,
the pathless plains and perilous shores
no moon yet shines on nor mounting dawn 95
in dew and daylight hath drenched for ever, far better were these for bold footsteps than gardens of the Gods gloom-encircled with idleness filled and empty days.
Yea! though the light lit them and the 100 loveliness

beyond heart's desire that hath held us slaves here long and long. But that light is dead.
Our gems are gone, our jewels ravished;
and the Three, my Three, thrice-enchanted globes of crystal by gleam undying 105 illuminated, lit by living splendour and all hues' essence, their eager flame – Morgoth has them in his monstrous hold, my Silmarils. I swear here oaths, unbreakable bonds to bind me ever, 110 by Timbrenting and the timeless halls of Bredhil the Blessed that abides thereon – may she hear and heed – to hunt endlessly unwearying unwavering through world and sea, through leaguered lands, lonely mountains, 115 over fens and forest and the fearful snows, till I find those fair ones, where the fate is hid

of the folk of Elfland and their fortune locked, where alone now lies the light divine.'

Then his sons beside him, the seven kinsmen, 120 crafty Curufin, Celegorm the fair, Damrod and Díriel and dark Cranthir, Maglor the mighty, and Maidros tall (the eldest, whose ardour yet more eager burnt than his father's flame, than Fëanor's wrath; 125 him fate awaited with fell purpose), these leapt with laughter their lord beside,
with linkèd hands there lightly took the oath unbreakable; blood thereafter it spilled like a sea and spent the swords 130 of endless armies, nor hath ended yet:

'Be he friend or foe or foul offspring of Morgoth Bauglir, be he mortal dark that in after days on earth shall dwell, shall no law nor love nor league of Gods, 135

no might nor mercy, not moveless fate, defend him for ever from the fierce vengeance of the sons of Fëanor, whoso seize or steal or finding keep the fair enchanted globes of crystal whose glory dies not, 140 the Silmarils. We have sworn for ever!

Then a mighty murmuring was moved abroad and the harkening host hailed them roaring:
 'Let us go! yea go from the Gods for ever on Morgoth's trail o'er the mountains of the 145
 world
 to vengeance and victory! Your vows are ours!

The poem ends here (but see note to line 146).

NOTES

- 41 starry gardens C, starlit domes A, B.
 42 Tengwethil's A (with Timbrenting written in margin), Timbrenting's B, Timbrenting C (with Taingwethil written in margin). See note to The Children of Húrin (second version) line 812.
 45 Bridhil A, B, C, emended in C to Bredhil; so also at line 112.
 107 and all hues' essence: this half-line

(in the form all hue's essence) occurs also in the second version of The Children of Húrin, line 381, where it is said of the Silmaril of Beren.

- 111 Tengwethil A, Timbrenting B, C.
134 that in after days on earth shall dwell: this line bracketed later in pencil in C.
146 There are three roughly-written lines in the margin of the last page of A which were not taken up in B and C, but which presumably follow on line 146:

But Finweg cried Fingolfin's son
when his father found that fair counsel, that wit and wisdom were of worth no more:
'Fools

Commentary on The Flight of the Noldoli

Sad as it is that this poem was abandoned so soon – when in full mastery of the alliterative line my father might have gone on to recount the Kinslaying of Alqualondë, the Prophecy of the North, the crossing of the Helcaraxë, and the burning of the ships, there is nonetheless in its few lines much of interest for the study of the development of the legend. Most notably, there here appears the earliest version of the actual words of the Fëanorian Oath. The Oath was first referred to in the outlines for Gilfanon's Tale (l. 238, 240):

The Seven Sons of Fëanor swore their terrible oath of hatred for ever against all, Gods or Elves or Men, who should hold the Silmarils but it was there sworn after the coming of the Elves from Valinor, and after the death of Fëanor. In the present poem is the first appearance of the story that the Oath was taken in Valinor before the departure of the Gnomes. It has also been referred to in The Children of Húrin, lines 631 ff. of the first version, where it is implied that the mountain of Tain-Gwethil was taken in witness – as it was in The Silmarillion (p. 83): here (line 111) Fëanor himself swears by Timbrenting that he will never cease to hunt for the Silmarils.

I cannot explain why line 134

that in after days on earth shall dwell

was bracketed (always a mark of exclusion or at least of doubtful retention) in the C-text. The line reappears in identical form in the Lay of Leithian (Canto VI, 1636); cf. The Silmarillion 'Vala, Demon, Elf or Man as yet unborn'.

The fixed epithets of certain of the Sons of Fëanor are changed from those in The Children of Húrin (see p. 86): Celegorm is now 'the fair' and Maedros 'the tall', as they remained; Maglor is 'the mighty' (in The Silmarillion 'the mighty singer'). The line concerning Maedros

him fate awaited with fell purpose

(126)

may show that a form of the story of his end was already in being (in the Tale of the Nauglafring he survived the attack on Dior the Fair but nothing more is told of him), but I think it much more likely that it refers to his capture and maiming by Morgoth.

In Fëanor's speech occur two interesting references: to the Nine Valar, and to his father Finn. The number of the Valar is nowhere stated in the Lost Tales (where in any case the name includes lesser divine beings; cf. e.g. I. 65–6 ‘With them came many of those lesser Vali ... the Mánir and the Súruli, the sylphs of the airs and of the winds’); but ‘the Nine Valar’ are referred to in the ‘Sketch of the Mythology’ (1926) and named in the 1930 ‘Silmarillion’: Manwë, Ulmo, Ossë, Aulë, Mandos, Lórien, Tulkas, Oromë, and Melko.

Fëanor’s father has not been named since the tale of The Theft of Melko and the Darkening of Valinor (I. 145 ff.), where he was called Bruithwir, slain by Melko. In The Children of Húrin there is no indication that Fëanor was akin to other princes of the Gnomes – though there can be no doubt that by that time he in fact was so. But the essential features of the Noldorin royal house as it had now emerged and as it was to remain for many years can now be deduced. In the first version of The Children of Húrin (line 29 and note) Turgon was the son of Finwë (actually spelt Finweg), as he had been in the Lost Tales (I. 115), but this was changed to Finwë’s heir, with the note ‘he was Fingolfin’s son’; and in the second version Turgon the mighty, / Fingolfin’s son is found in the text as written (48–9). We thus have:

Finwë (Finweg)
|
Fingolfin
|
Turgon

Further, Finweg appears in The Children of Húrin (first version 1975, second version 19, 520) as the King of the Gnomes who died in the Battle of Unnumbered Tears; in two of these cases the name was later changed to Fingon. In the lines added at the end of the A-text of The Flight of the Noldoli (note to line 146) Finweg is Fingolfin’s son. We can therefore add:

Now in The Flight of the Noldoli Fëanor is called Finn's son; and in the 'Sketch of the Mythology' Finn is given as an alternative to Finwë:

The Eldar are divided into three hosts, one under Ingwë (Ing) ..., one under Finwë (Finn) after called the Noldoli ...

*

Thus Fëanor has become Fingolfin's brother:

(Only in a later note to lines 1713-20 of The Children of Húrin has Finwë's third son Finrod appeared, father of Felagund, Angrod, Egnor, and Orodreth.)

Fëanor's speech also contains a curious foreknowledge of the making of the Sun and Moon (92-6):

The woods of the world whose wide mansions
yet in darkness dream drowned in slumber,
the pathless plains and perilous shores
no moon yet shines on nor mounting dawn
in dew and daylight hath drenched for ever

Very notable are Fëanor's concluding words (117-18):

till I find those fair ones, where the fate is hid
of the folk of Elfland and their fortune locked

Cf. The Silmarillion, p. 67: 'Mandos foretold that the fates of Arda lay locked within them', and Thingol's words to Beren (ibid. p. 167): 'though the fate of Arda lie within the Silmarils, yet you shall hold me generous'. It is clear that the Silmarils had already gained greatly in significance since the earliest period of the mythology (see I. 156, 169 note 2; II. 259).

In no other version is Fëanor seen on this occasion holding flaming torches in his hands and whirling them aloft. The lines (38-9)

Of the Three Kindreds to that clamorous throng
are none but the Gnomes in numbers drawn

go back to the tale of The Flight of the Noldoli (I. 162): 'Now when ... Fëanor sees that far the most of the company is of the kin of the Noldor', on which I noted (I. 169) 'It is to be remembered that in the old story the Teleri (i.e. the later Vanyar) had not departed from Kôr.' Later evidence shows that the old story had not been changed; but the fact that in the present poem the Elves of Ing (Ingwë) were on Timbrenting (Taniquetil) in the mansions of Manwë and Varda shows the entry of the later narrative (found in the 'Sketch') of the destruction of the Trees. In the old tale of The Theft of Melko and the Darkening of Valinor (I. 143 ff. and commentary I. 157) the great festival was the occasion of Melko's attack on the place of the Gnomes' banishment northward in Valinor, the slaying of Fëanor's father, and the theft of the Silmarils; and the destruction of the Trees followed some time afterwards. Now however the festival is the occasion of the attack on the Trees; the First Kindred are on Taniquetil but most of the Gnomes are not.

The name by which Varda is here called, Bridhil the Blessed (changed in C to Bredhil), is found in the old Gnomish dictionary, and also Timbridhil (l. 269, 273, entries Tinwetári, Varda). On Timbrenting see p. 127, where the form Tindbrenting occurring in The Children of Húrin (in a note to second version line 812) is discussed. Both forms are found in the 'Sketch':

Timbrenting or Tindbrenting in English, Tengwethil in Gnomish, Taniquetil in Elfin.

The form with -m- is therefore evidently due to a change of pronunciation in English, ndb > mb.

In line 41 the earlier reading starlit domes, changed to starry gardens, is probably to be related to the account in the tale of The Coming of the Valar and the Building of Valinor of Manwë's abode on Taniquetil (l. 73):

That house was builded of marbles white and blue and stood amid the fields of snow, and its roofs were made of a web of that blue air called ilwë that is above the white and grey. This web did Aulë and his wife contrive, but Varda spangled it with stars, and Manwë dwelt thereunder.

This idea of a roof lit with stars was never lost and appears in a changed form long after, though it is not mentioned in The Silmarillion.

The lines (21-3)

The dim fingers
of fog came floating from the formless waste and sunless seas

find an echo in The Silmarillion (p. 76):

it blew chill from the East in that hour, and the vast shadows of the sea were rolled against the walls of the shore.

The lines at the end of the A-text (note to line 146) show that Fingolfin has taken Finwë Nólemë's place as the voice of reason and moderation amid the revolutionary enthusiasm of the Noldoli in the great square of Kôr (see I. 162, 171).

Lastly may be noticed the term 'Foam-riders' used (line 52) of the Third Kindred (the Solosimpi of the Lost Tales, later the Teleri); this has been used once before, in Ælfwine of England (ll. 314), where it is said of Ælfwine's mother Éadgifu that when he was born the Foamriders, the Elves of the Sea-marge, whom she had known of old in Lionesse, sent messengers to his birth.

Analysis of the metre of the poem

At the end of the second text (B) of The Flight of the Noldoli my father made an analysis of the metrical forms of the first 20 and certain subsequent lines. For his analysis and explanation of the Old English metre see On Translating Beowulf, in The Monsters and the Critics and Other Essays, 1983, pp. 61 ff. The letters A, +A, B, C, D, E on the left-hand side of the table refer to the 'types' of Old English half-line; the letters beneath the analyses of 'lifts' and 'dips' are the alliterations employed in each line, with O used for any vowel (since all vowels 'alliterate' with each other) and X for a consonant beginning a lift but not forming part of the alliterative scheme of the line; the words 'full', 'simple', etc. refer to the nature of the alliterative pattern in each case.

1	B A	$\sim \sim \frac{\diagup}{T} \sim \frac{\diagup}{X}$		$\frac{\diagup}{T} \sim \frac{\diagup}{X} \sim$	simple
2	A B	$\frac{\diagup}{G} \sim \frac{\diagup}{S} \sim$		$\sim \frac{\diagup}{G} (\sim) \sim \sim \frac{\diagup}{S}$	crossed
3	+A B	$\sim \sim \frac{\diagup}{M} \sim \frac{\diagup}{M} \sim$		$\sim \sim \frac{\diagup}{M} \sim \frac{\diagup}{X}$	full
4	B C	$\sim \frac{\diagup}{F} \sim \frac{\diagup}{F}$		$\sim \frac{\diagup}{F} \frac{\diagup}{X} \sim$	full
5	A B	$\frac{\diagup}{G} \sim \frac{\diagup}{G} \sim$		$\sim \frac{\diagup}{G} \sim \frac{\diagup}{X}$	full
6	+A B	$\sim \frac{\diagup}{D} \sim \frac{\diagup}{D} \sim$		$\sim \frac{\diagup}{D} \sim \frac{\diagup}{X}$	full
7	C A	$\sim \frac{\diagup}{B} \sim \frac{\diagup}{B} \sim$		$\frac{\diagup}{B} \sim \frac{\diagup}{X} \sim$	full
8	B C	$\sim \sim \frac{\diagup}{G} \sim \sim \frac{\diagup}{G}$		$\sim \frac{\diagup}{G} \frac{\diagup}{X} \sim$	full
9	B B	$\sim \frac{\diagup}{Sp} \sim \frac{\diagup}{X}$		$\sim \frac{\diagup}{Sp} \sim \frac{\diagup}{X}$	simple
10	B B	$\sim \frac{\diagup}{Sh} \sim \frac{\diagup}{X}$		$\sim \frac{\diagup}{Sh} \sim \frac{\diagup}{X}$	simple
11	B B	$\sim \frac{\diagup}{W} \sim \sim \frac{\diagup}{W}$		$\sim \frac{\diagup}{W} \sim \frac{\diagup}{X}$	full
12	C B	$\sim \sim \frac{\diagup}{B} \frac{\diagup}{B} \sim$		$\sim \frac{\diagup}{B} \sim \frac{\diagup}{X}$	full
13	+A B	$\sim \frac{\diagup}{L} \sim \frac{\diagup}{L} \sim$		$\sim \sim \frac{\diagup}{L} \sim \frac{\diagup}{X}$	full
14	A A	$\frac{\diagup}{M} \sim \frac{\diagup}{M} \sim$		$\frac{\diagup}{M} \sim \frac{\diagup}{X} \sim$	full
15	+A A	$\sim \sim \frac{\diagup}{H} \sim \sim \frac{\diagup}{X}$		$\frac{\diagup}{H} \sim \frac{\diagup}{X} \sim$	simple
16	B C	$\sim \frac{\diagup}{G} \sim \sim \frac{\diagup}{G}$		$\sim \sim \frac{\diagup}{G} \frac{\diagup}{X} \sim$	full
17	C A	$\sim \frac{\diagup}{O} \sim \frac{\diagup}{M} \sim$		$\frac{\diagup}{M} \sim \sim \frac{\diagup}{O} \sim$	double
18	+A B	$\sim \sim \frac{\diagup}{M} \sim \sim \frac{\diagup}{K} \sim$		$\sim \frac{\diagup}{M} \sim \frac{\diagup}{K}$	crossed
19	B C	$\sim \sim \frac{\diagup}{W} \sim \frac{\diagup}{W}$		$\sim \sim \frac{\diagup}{W} \frac{\diagup}{X} \sim$	full
20	E B	$\frac{\diagup}{T} \sim \frac{\diagup}{T} \sim \frac{\diagup}{T}$		$\sim \frac{\diagup}{T} \sim \frac{\diagup}{X}$	full
37	E B	$\frac{\diagup}{W} (\frac{\diagup}{W}) \sim \frac{\diagup}{X}$		$\sim \frac{\diagup}{W} \sim \frac{\diagup}{X}$	simple +
51	D B	$\frac{\diagup}{S} \frac{\diagup}{S} \sim \frac{\diagup}{S}$		$\sim \sim \frac{\diagup}{S} \sim \frac{\diagup}{X}$	full
57	E A	$\frac{\diagup}{P} \sim \frac{\diagup}{P} \sim \frac{\diagup}{X}$		$\frac{\diagup}{P} \sim \frac{\diagup}{X} \sim$	simple
61	B A	$\sim \sim \frac{\diagup}{K} \sim \frac{\diagup}{K}$		$\frac{\diagup}{K} \sim \frac{\diagup}{X} \sim$	full
67	+E A	$\sim \frac{\diagup}{F} \sim \sim \frac{\diagup}{F}$		$\frac{\diagup}{F} \sim \frac{\diagup}{X} \sim$	full
79	+A B	$\sim \frac{\diagup}{F} \sim \frac{\diagup}{F} \sim$		$\sim \frac{\diagup}{F} \sim \sim \frac{\diagup}{X}$	full
107	+A B	$\sim \frac{\diagup}{O} \sim \frac{\diagup}{O} \sim$		$\sim \frac{\diagup}{O} \sim \frac{\diagup}{X}$	full

It may be noticed that the scansion of the first half of line 8 (with the first lift -goli-) shows that the primary stress fell on the second syllable of Ungóliant; and that sp can only alliterate with sp (lines 9, 130), as in Old English (the same is of course true of sh, which is a separate consonant).

(ii) Fragment of an alliterative Lay of Eärendel

There exists one other piece of alliterative verse concerned with the matter of the Lost Tales, the opening of a poem that has no title and does not extend far enough to make clear what its subject was to be. The fall of Gondolin, the escape of the fugitives down the secret tunnel, the fight at Cristhorn, and the long wandering in the wilds thereafter, are passed over rapidly in what were to be the introductory lines, and the subject seems about to appear at the end of the fragment:

all this have others in ancient stories
and songs unfolded, but say I further ...

and the concluding lines refer to the sojourn of the fugitives in the Land of Willows. But at the end of the text my father wrote several times in different scripts 'Earendel', 'Earendel son of Fengel', 'Earendel Fengelsson'; and I think it extremely likely, even almost certain, that this poem was to be a Lay of Eärendel. (On Fengel see the next section.)

The text is in the first stage of composition and is exceedingly rough, but it contains one line of the utmost interest for the history of Eärendel. It is written on examination paper from the University of Leeds and clearly belongs in time with The Lay of the Children of Húrin and The Flight of the Noldoli: more than that seems impossible to say.

Lo! the flame of fire and fierce hatred engulfed Gondolin and its glory fell, its tapering towers and its tall rooftops were laid all low, and its leaping fountains made no music more on the mount of Gwareth, 5

and its whitehewn walls were whispering ash.

{ But Wade of the Helsing's wearyhearted } { Tur the earthborn was tried in battle } from the wrack and ruin a remnant led women and children and wailing maidens and wounded men of the withered folk 10 down the path unproven that pierced the hillside, neath Tumladin he led them to the leaguer of hills

that rose up rugged as ranged pinnacles to the north of the vale. There the narrow way of Cristhorn was cloven, the Cleft of 15 Eagles,

through the midmost mountains. And more is told

in lays and in legend and lore of others of that weary way of the wandering folk;
how the waifs of Gondolin outwitted Melko, vanished o'er the vale and vanquished the 20
hills,

how Glorfindel the golden in the gap of the Eagles

battled with the Balrog and both were slain:
one like flash of fire from fangéd rock, one like bolted thunder black was smitten to the dreadful deep digged by Thornsir. 25

Of the thirst and hunger of the thirty moons when they sought for Sirion and were sore bestead

by plague and peril; of the Pools of Twilight and Land of Willows; when their lamentation was heard in the halls where the high Gods 30 sate

 veiled in Valinor ... the Vanished Isles;
 all this have others in ancient stories
 and songs unfolded, but say I further how their lot was lightened, how they laid them down
 in long grasses of the Land of Willows. 35
 There sun was softer, ... the sweet breezes and whispering winds, there wells of slumber and the dew enchanted

NOTES

- 25 The next lines are where stony-voicéd that stream of Eagles runs o'er the rocky but the second of these is struck out and the first left without continuation.
- 31 The second half-line was written in the Vanished Isles, but in was struck out and replaced by a word that I cannot interpret.
- 36 The second half-line was written and the sweet breezes, but and was struck out and replaced by some other word, possibly then.

Commentary

For the form Tûr see ll. 148, 260.

In the tale of The Fall of Gondolin Cristhorn, the Eagles' Cleft, was in the Encircling Mountains south of Gondolin, and the secret tunnel led southwards from the city (ll. 167–8 etc.); but from line 14 of this fragment it is seen that the change to the north had already entered the legend.

Lines 26–7 (the thirty moons when they sought for Sirion) go back to the Fall of Gondolin, where it is said that the fugitives wandered 'a year and more' in the wastes (see ll. 195, 214).

The reading of line 7 as first written (it was not struck out, but Tûr the earthborn was tried in battle was added in the margins):

But Wade of the Helsings wearyhearted is remarkable. It is taken directly from the very early Old English poem Widsith, where occurs the line Wada Hælsingum, sc. Wada [weold] Hælsingum, 'Wada ruled the Hælsingas'. One may well wonder why the mysterious figure of Wade should appear here in Tuor's place, and indeed I cannot explain it: but whatever the reason, the association of Wade with Tuor is not casual. Of the original story of Wade almost nothing is known; but he survived in popular recollection through the Middle Ages and later – he is mentioned by Malory as a mighty being, and Chaucer refers to 'Wade's boat' in The Merchant's Tale; in Troilus and Crisyede Pandare told a 'tale of Wade'. R. W. Chambers (Widsith, Cambridge 1912, p. 95) said that Wade was perhaps 'originally a sea-giant, dreaded and honoured by the coast tribes of the North Sea and the Baltic'; and the tribe of the Hælsingas over which he is said to have ruled in Widsith is supposed to have left its name in Helsingör (Elsinore) in Denmark and in Helsingfors in Finland. Chambers summed up what few generalities he thought might be made from the scattered references in English and German as follows:

We find these common characteristics, which we may assume belonged to their ancient prototype, Wada of the Hælsingas:

(1) Power over the sea.

(2) Extraordinary strength – often typified by superhuman stature.

(3) The use of these powers to help those whom Wade favours.

... Probably he grew out of the figure, not of a historic chief, but of a supernatural power, who had no story all his own, and who interested mortal men only when he interfered in their concerns. Hence he is essentially a helper in time of need; and we may be fairly confident that already in the oldest lays he possessed this character.

Most interesting, however, is the fact that in Speght's annotations to Chaucer (1598) he said:

Concerning Wade and his bote Guingelot, as also his strange exploits in the same, because the matter is long and fabulous, I passe it over.

The likeness of Guingelot to Wingelot is sufficiently striking; but when we place together the facts that Wingelot was Eärendel's ship,* that Eärendel was Tuor's son, that Tuor was peculiarly associated with the sea, and that here 'Wade of the Helsingas' stands in the place of Tuor, coincidence is ruled out. Wingelot was derived from Wade's boat Guingelot as certainly, I think, as was Eärendel from the Old English figure (this latter being a fact expressly stated by my father, II. 309).

Why my father should have intruded 'Wade of the Helsingas' into the verses at this point is another question. It may conceivably have been unintentional – the words Wada Hælsingum were running in his mind (though in that case one might expect that he would have struck the line out and not merely written another line against it as an alternative): but at any rate the reason why they were running in his mind is clear, and this possibility in no way diminishes the demonstrative value of the line that Wingelot was derived from Guingelot, and that there was a connection of greater significance than the mere taking over of a name – just as in the case of Eärendel.

(iii) The Lay of the Fall of Gondolin

This was the title that late in his life my father wrote on the bundle of papers constituting the abandoned beginning of this poem; but it seems that it was not conceived on a large scale, since the narrative had reached the dragon-fire arising over the northern heights already within 130 lines. That he composed it while at the University of Leeds is certain, but I strongly suspect that it was the first versification of matter from the Lost Tales undertaken, before he turned to the alliterative line. The story, so far as it goes, has undergone virtually no development from the prose tale of The Fall of Gondolin, and the closeness of the Lay to the Tale can be seen from this comparison (though the passage is exceptional):

(Tale, II.158)

Rejoice that ye have found it, for behold before you the City of Seven Names where all who war with Melko may find hope.'

Then said Tuor: 'What be those names?' And the chief of the Guard made answer: "'Tis said and 'tis sung: "Gondobar am I called and Gondothlimbar, City of Stone and City of the Dwellers in Stone, &c.

(Lay) Rejoice that ye have found it and rest from endless war,
For the seven-named city 'tis that stands upon the hill, Where all who strive with Morgoth find hope and valour still.'
'What be those names,' said Tuor, 'for I come from long afar?'
"Tis said and 'tis sung,' one answered, "'My name is Gondobar
And Gondothlimbar also, the City hewn of Stone,
The fortress of the Gnome-folk who dwell in Halls of Stone, &c.

I do not give this poem in extenso here, since it does not, so far as the main narrative is concerned, add anything to the Tale; and my father found, as I think, the metrical form unsuitable to the purpose. There are, however, several passages of interest for the study of the larger development of the legends.

In the Tale, Tuor was the son of Peleg (who was the son of Indor, II. 160), but here he is the son of Fengel; while on a scrap of paper giving rough workings of the passage cited above* Tuor himself is called Fengel – cf. 'Eärendel son of Fengel' at the end of the fragment of an Eärendel Lay, p. 141. Long afterwards Fengel was the name of the fifteenth King of Rohan in the Third Age, grandfather of Théoden, and there it is the Old English noun fengel 'king, prince'.

There are some puzzling statements made concerning Fingolfin, whose appearance here, I feel certain, is earlier than those in the alliterative poems; and the passage in which he appears introduces also the story of Isfin and Eöl.

Lo, that prince of Gondobar [Meglin]
dark Eöl's son whom Isfin, in a mountain dale afar in the gloom of Doriath's forest, the white-limbed maiden bare,

the daughter of Fingolfin, Gelmir's mighty heir.
'Twas the bent blades of the Glamhoth that drank Fingolfin's life
as he stood alone by Fëanor; but his maiden and his wife were wildered as they sought him in the forests of the night,
in the pathless woods of Doriath, so dark that as a light of palely mirrored moonsheen were their slender elfin limbs
straying among the black holes where only the dim bat skims from Thû's dark-delvéd caverns. There Eöl saw that sheen
and he caught the white-limbed Isfin, that she ever since hath been his mate in Doriath's forest, where she weepeth in the gloom;
for the Dark Elves were his kindred that wander without home.
Meglin she sent to Gondolin, and his honour there was high
as the latest seed of Fingolfin, whose glory shall not die;
a lordship he won of the Gnome-folk who quarry deep in the earth,
seeking their ancient jewels; but little was his mirth, and dark he was and secret and his hair as the strands of night
that are tangled in Taur Fuin* the forest without light.

In the Lost Tales Finwë Nólemë, first Lord of the Noldoli, was the father of Turgon (and so of Isfin, who was Turgon's sister), I. 115; Finwë Nólemë was slain in the Battle of Unnumbered Tears and his heart cut out by Orcs, but Turgon rescued the body and heart of his father, and the Scarlet Heart became his grim emblem (I. 241, II. 172). Finwë Nólemë is also called Fingolma (I. 238-9, II. 220).

In the alliterative poems Fingolfin is the son of Finwë (Finweg) and the father of Turgon, and also of Finweg (> Fingon), as he was to remain (p. 137). Thus:

But whereas in the Lay of the Fall of Gondolin Fingolfin has emerged and stepped into Finwë's place as the father of Turgon and Isfin, he is not here the son of Finwë but of one Gelmir:

In an early prose text – one of the very few scraps (to be given in the next volume) that bridge the gap in the prose history between the Lost Tales and the 'Sketch of the Mythology' – Gelmir appears as the King of the Noldoli at the time of the flight from Valinor, and one of his sons is there named Golfin.

There is too little evidence extant (if there ever was any more written down) to penetrate with certainty the earliest evolution of the Noldorin kings. The simplest explanation is that this Gelmir, father of Golfin/Fingolfin = Fingolma/Finwë Nólemë, father of Fingolfin. But it is also said in this passage that Fingolfin was slain by the Glamhoth 'as he stood alone by Fëanor', and whatever story lies behind this is now vanished (for the earliest, very obscure, references to the death of Fëanor see I. 238–9).

This passage from the Lay of the Fall of Gondolin contains the first account of the story of Eöl the Dark Elf, Isfin sister of Turgon, and their son Meglin (for a very primitive form of the legend see II. 220). In the prose tale of The Fall of Gondolin the story is dismissed in the words ‘that tale of Isfin and Eöl may not here be told’, II. 165. In the Lay, Fingolfin’s wife and daughter (Isfin) were seeking for him when Isfin was taken by Eöl. Since in the ‘Sketch’ Isfin was lost in Taur-na-Fuin after the Battle of Unnumbered Tears and there trapped by Eöl, it is possible that at this stage Fingolfin was the Elvish king who died (beside Fëanor?) in the great battle. It is also possible that we see here the genesis of the idea of Isfin’s wandering in the wilds, although of course with subsequent shifts, whereby Fingolfin died in duel with Morgoth after the Battle of Sudden Flame and Fingon (Isfin’s brother) was the Noldorin king slain in the Battle of Unnumbered Tears, the story that she was seeking her father was abandoned. What this passage does certainly show is that the story of Isfin’s sending her son to Gondolin is original, but that originally Isfin remained with her captor Eöl and never escaped from him.

Eöl here dwells ‘in a mountain dale afar in the gloom of Doriath’s forest’, ‘in the forests of the night’, ‘where only the dim bat skims from Thû’s dark-delvéd caverns’. This must be the earliest reference to Thû, and at any rate in connected writing the earliest to Doriath (Artanor of the Lost Tales). I have suggested (II. 63) that in the Tale of Tinúviel ‘Artanor was conceived as a great region of forest in the heart of which was Tinwelint’s cavern’, and that the zone of the Queen’s protection ‘was originally less distinctly bordered, and less extensive, than “the Girdle of Melian” afterwards became’. Here the description of Eöl’s habitation in a forest without light (where Thû lives in caverns) suggests rather the forest of Taur-na-Fuin, where

Never-dawning night was netted clinging
in the black branches of the beetling trees

and where goblins even (whose deep eyes drill the darkest shadows) bewildered wandered

(The Children of Húrin, p. 34, lines 753 ff.)

The passage also contains an interesting reference to the purpose of the miners of Gondolin: 'seeking their ancient jewels.'

Earlier in this Lay some lines are given to the coming of Tuor to the hidden door beneath the Encircling Mountains:

Thither Tuor son of Fengel came out of the dim land that the Gnomes have called Dor-Lómin, with Bronweg at his hand,
who fled from the Iron Mountains and had broken Melko's chain
and cast his yoke of evil, of torment and bitter pain;
who alone most faithful-hearted led Tuor by long ways through empty hills and valleys by dark nights and perilous days,
till his blue lamp magic-kindled, where flow the shadowy rills
beneath enchanted alders, found that Gate beneath the hills,
the door in dark Dungorthin that only the Gnome-folk knew.

In a draft for this passage the name here is Nan Orwen, emended to Dungorthin. In The Children of Húrin (lines 1457 ff.) Túrin and Flinding came to this 'grey valley' after they had passed west over Sirion, and reached the roots of the Shadowy Mountains 'that Hithlum girdle'. For earlier references to Nan Dungorthin and different placings of it see

p. 87; the present passage seems to indicate yet another, with the hidden door of Gondolin opening into it.

A few other passages may be noticed. At the beginning there is a reference to old songs telling how the Gods in council gathered on the outmost rocky bars of the Lonely Island westward, and devised a land of ease beyond the great sea-shadows and the shadowy seas; how they made the deep gulf of Faërie with long and lonely shore ...

That the Gods were ferried on an island by Ossë and the Oarni at the time of the fall of the Lamps is told in the tale of The Coming of the Valar (I.70), and that this isle was afterwards that of the Elves' ferrying (becoming Tol Eressëa) is told in The Coming of the Elves (I. 118).

When Gondolin was built the people cried 'Côr is built anew!' and the guard who told Tuor the seven names said:

Loth, the Flower, they name me, saying 'Côr is born again, even in Loth-a-ladwen,* the Lily of the Plain.'

I have noticed earlier (II. 208) that whereas it is explicit in The Silmarillion that Turgon devised the city to be 'a memorial of Tirion upon Túna', and it became 'as beautiful as a memory of Elven Tirion', this is not said in The Fall of Gondolin: Turgon was born in the Great Lands after the return of the Noldoli from Valinor, and had never known Kôr. 'One may feel nonetheless that the tower of the King, the fountains and stairs, the white marbles of Gondolin embody a recollection of Kôr as it is described in The Coming of the Elves and the Making of Kôr (I. 122-3).'

There is also a reference to Eärendel who passed the Gates of Dread, half-mortal and half-elfin, undying and long dead.

The Gates of Dread are probably the gates of the Door of Night, through which Eärendel passed (Il. 255).

III

THE LAY OF LEITHIAN

My father wrote in his diary that he began 'the poem of Tinúviel' during the period of the summer examinations of 1925 (see p. 3), and he abandoned it in September 1931 (see below), when he was 39. The rough workings for the whole poem are extant (and 'rough' means very rough indeed); from them he wrote a fair copy, which I shall call 'A'.*

On this manuscript A my father most uncharacteristically inserted dates, the first of these being at line 557 (August 23, 1925); and he composed the last hundred-odd lines of the third Canto (ending at line 757) while on holiday at Filey on the Yorkshire coast in September 1925. The next date is two and a half years and 400 lines later, 27-28 March 1928 written against line 1161; and thereafter each day for a further nine days, till 6 April 1928, is marked, during which time he wrote out no less than 1768 lines, to 2929.

Since the dates refer to the copying of verses out fair in the manuscript, not to their actual composition, it might be thought that they prove little; but the rough workings of lines 2497-2504 are written on an abandoned letter dated 1 April 1928, and these lines were written in the fair copy A on 4 April - showing that lines 2505-2929 were actually composed between 1 and 6 April. I think therefore that the dates on A can be taken as effectively indicating the time of composition.

The date November 1929 (at line 3031) is followed by a substantial amount of composition in the last week of September 1930, and again in the middle of September 1931; the last date is 17 September of that year against line 4085 very near the point where the Lay was abandoned. Details of the dates are given in the Notes.

There is also a typescript text ('B') made by my father, of which the last few hundred lines are in manuscript, and this text ends at precisely the same point as does A. This typescript was begun quite early, since my father mentioned in his diary for 16 August 1926 having done 'a little typing of part of Tinúviel'; and before the end of 1929 he gave it to C. S. Lewis to read. On 7 December of that year Lewis wrote to him about it, saying:

I sat up late last night and have read the Geste as far as to where Beren and his gnomish allies defeat the patrol of orcs above the sources of the Narog and disguise themselves in the rēaf [Old English: 'garments, weapons, taken from the slain']. I can quite honestly say that it is ages since I have had an evening of such delight: and the personal interest of reading a friend's work had very little to do with it. I should have enjoyed it just as well as if I'd picked it up in a bookshop, by an unknown author. The two things that come out clearly are the sense of reality in the background and the mythical value: the essence of a myth being that it should have no taint of allegory to the maker and yet should suggest incipient allegories to the reader.

Lewis had thus reached in his reading about line 2017. He had evidently received more; it may be that the typescript by this time extended to the attack on Lúthien and Beren by Celegorm and Curufin fleeing from Nargothrond, against which (at line 3031) is the date November 1929 in the manuscript. Some time after this, probably early in 1930, Lewis sent my father 14 pages of detailed criticism, as far as line 1161 (if there was any more it has not survived). This criticism he contrived as a heavily academic commentary on the text, pretending to treat the Lay as an ancient and anonymous work extant in many more or less corrupt manuscripts, overlaid by scribal perversions in antiquity and the learned argumentation of nineteenth-century scholars; and thus entertainingly took the sting from some sharply expressed judgements, while at the same time in this disguise expressing strong praise for particular passages. Almost all the verses which Lewis found wanting for one reason or another are marked for revision in the typescript B if not actually rewritten, and in many cases his proposed emendations, or modifications of them, are incorporated into the text. The greater part of Lewis's commentary is given on pp. 315 ff., with the verses he criticised and the alterations made as a result.

My father abandoned the Lay at the point where the jaws of Carcharoth crashed together like a trap on Beren's hand and the Silmaril was engulfed, but though he never advanced beyond that place in the narrative, he did not abandon it for good. When The Lord of the Rings was finished he returned to the Lay again and recast the first two Cantos and a good part of the third, and small portions of some others.

To summarise the elements of this history:

- (1) Rough workings of the whole poem, composed 1925–31.
- (2) Manuscript A of the whole poem, written out progressively during 1925–31.
- (3) Typescript B of the whole poem (ending in manuscript), already in progress in 1926.

This typescript given to C. S. Lewis towards the end of 1929, when it extended probably to about line 3031.

- (4) Recasting of the opening Cantos and parts of some others (after the completion of The Lord of the Rings).
-

The manuscript A was emended, both by changes and insertions, at different times, the majority of these alterations being incorporated in the typescript B; while in B, as typed, there are further changes not found in A.

The amount of emendation made to B varies very greatly. My father used it as a basis for the later rewritings, and in these parts the old typescript is entirely covered with new verses; but for long stretches – by far the greater part of the poem – the text is untouched save for very minor and as it were casual modifications to individual lines here and there.

After much experimentation I have concluded that to make a single text, an amalgam derived from the latest writing throughout the poem, would be wholly mistaken. Quite apart from the practical difficulty of changed names in the rewritten parts that do not scan in the old lines, the later verse in its range and technical accomplishment is too distinct; too much time had passed, and in the small amount that my father rewrote of the Lay of Leithian after The Lord of the Rings we have fragments of a new poem: from which we can gain an idea of what might have been. I have therefore excised these parts, and give them subsequently and separately (Chapter IV).

A further reason for doing so lies in the purpose of this book, which includes the consideration of the Lays as important stages in the evolution of the legends. Some of the revisions to the Lay of Leithian are at least 30 years later than the commencement of the poem. From the point of view of the 'history', therefore, the abandonment of the poem in or soon after September 1931 constitutes a terminal point, and I have excluded emendations to names that are (as I believe) certainly later than that, but included those which are earlier.* In a case like that of Beleriand, for instance, which was Broseliand for much of the poem in B and always later emended to Beleriand, but had become Beleriand as first written by line 3957, I give Beleriand throughout. On the other hand I retain Gnomes since my father still used this in The Hobbit.

The many small changes made for metrical/stylistic reasons, however, constitute a problem in the attempt to produce a '1931 text', since it is often impossible to be sure to which 'phase' they belong. Some are demonstrably very early – e.g. candle flowers emended to flowering candles (line 516), since C. S. Lewis commented on the latter – while others are demonstrably from many years later, and strictly speaking belong with the late rewritings; but many cannot be certainly determined. In any case, such changes – very often made to get rid of certain artifices employed as metrical aids, most notably among these the use of emphatic tenses with doth and did simply in order to obtain a syllable – such changes have no repercussions beyond the improvement of the individual line; and in such cases it seems a pity, through rigid adherence to the textual basis, to lose such small enhancements, or at any rate to hide them in a trail of tedious textual notes, while letting their less happy predecessors stand in the text. I have thought it justifiable therefore to be frankly inconsistent in these details, and while for example retaining Gnomes (for Elves or other substitution) or Thû (for Gorthû or Sauron), to introduce small changes of wording that are certainly later than these.

As in the Lay of the Children of Húrin there are no numbered notes to the text; the annotation, related to the line-numbers of the poem, is very largely restricted to earlier readings, and these earlier readings are restricted to cases where there is some significant difference, as of name or motive. Citations from the manuscript A are always citations from that text as first written (in very many cases it was emended to the reading found in B).

It is to be noticed that while the Lay of Leithian was in process of composition the 'Sketch of the Mythology' was written (first in 1926) and rewritten, leading directly into the version of 'The Silmarillion' that I ascribe to 1930, in which many of the essentials, both in narrative and language, of the published work were already present. In my commentaries on each Canto I attempt to take stock of the development in the legends pari passu with the text of the poem, and only refer exceptionally to the contemporary prose works.

The A-text has no title, but on the covering page of the bundle of rough workings is written Tinúviel, and in his early references to the poem my father called it thus, as he called the alliterative poem Túrin. The B-text bears this title:

The GEST
of BEREN son of BARAHIR
and LÚTHIEN the FAY called TINÚVIEL the NIGHTINGALE or the
LAY OF LEITHIAN
Release from Bondage

The 'Gest of Beren and Lúthien' means a narrative in verse, telling of the deeds of Beren and Lúthien. The word gest is pronounced as Modern English jest, being indeed the 'same word' in phonetic form, though now totally changed in meaning.

My father never explained the name Leithian 'Release from Bondage', and we are left to choose, if we will, among various applications that can be seen in the poem. Nor did he leave any comment on the significance – if there is a significance – of the likeness of Leithian to Leithien ‘England’. In the tale of Ælfwine of England the Elvish name of England is Lúthien (which was earlier the name of Ælfwine himself, England being Luthany), but at the first occurrence (only) of this name the word Leithian was pencilled above it (Il. 330, note 20). In the ‘Sketch of the Mythology’ England was still Lúthien (and at that time Thingol’s daughter was also Lúthien), but this was emended to Leithien, and this is the form in the 1930 version of ‘The Silmarillion’. I cannot say (i) what connection if any there was between the two significances of Lúthien, nor (ii) whether Leithien (once Leithian) ‘England’ is or was related to Leithian ‘Release from Bondage’. The only evidence of an etymological nature that I have found is a hasty note, impossible to date, which refers to a stem leth- ‘set free’, with leithia ‘release’, and compares Lay of Leithian.

The GEST of BEREN and LÚTHIEN

A king there was in days of old:

ere Men yet walked upon the mould
his power was reared in cavern’s shade,
his hand was over glen and glade.

His shields were shining as the moon,

5

his lances keen of steel were hewn, of silver grey his crown was wrought,
the starlight in his banners caught;

and silver thrilled his trumpets long beneath the stars in challenge strong;

10

enchantment did his realm enfold,

where might and glory, wealth untold,

he wielded from his ivory throne
in many-pillared halls of stone.
There beryl, pearl, and opal pale, 15 and metal wrought like fishes' mail, buckler and corslet, axe and sword, and gleaming spears were laid in hoard – all these he had and loved them less than a maiden once in Elfinesse; 20 for fairer than are born to Men
a daughter had he, Lúthien.

Such lissom limbs no more shall run on the green earth beneath the sun;
so fair a maid no more shall be 25
from dawn to dusk, from sun to sea.
Her robe was blue as summer skies,
but grey as evening were her eyes;
'twas sewn with golden lilies fair,
but dark as shadow was her hair. 30
Her feet were light as bird on wing, her laughter lighter than the spring;
the slender willow, the bowing reed,
the fragrance of a flowering mead,
the light upon the leaves of trees, 35
the voice of water, more than these
her beauty was and blissfulness,
her glory and her loveliness;
and her the king more dear did prize than hand or heart or light of eyes. 40

They dwelt amid Beleriand, while Elfin power yet held the land, in the woven woods of Doriath:

few ever thither found the path;
few ever dared the forest-eaves 45 to pass, or stir the listening leaves with tongue of hounds a-hunting fleet, with horse, or horn, or mortal feet.
To North there lay the Land of Dread,
whence only evil pathways led 50
o'er hills of shadow bleak and cold or Taur-na-Fuin's haunted hold, where Deadly Nightshade lurked and lay and never came or moon or day;
to South the wide earth unexplored; 55
to West the ancient Ocean roared,
unsailed and shoreless, wide and wild;
to East in peaks of blue were piled
in silence folded, mist-enfurled,
the mountains of the Outer World, 60
beyond the tangled woodland shade, thorn and thicket, grove and glade, whose brooding boughs with magic hung were ancient when the world was young.

There Thingol in the Thousand Caves, 65 whose portals pale that river laves Esgalduin that fairies call, in many a tall and torchlit hall
a dark and hidden king did dwell, lord of the forest and the fell; 70 and sharp his sword and high his helm,
the king of beech and oak and elm.

There Lúthien the lissom maid would dance in dell and grassy glade, and music merrily, thin and clear, 75 went down the ways, more fair than ear of mortal Men at feast hath heard, and fairer than the song of bird.

When leaves were long and grass was green then Dairon with his fingers lean, 80
as daylight melted into shade, a wandering music sweetly made,
enchanted fluting, warbling wild,
for love of Thingol's elfin child.

There bow was bent and shaft was sped, 85
the fallow deer as phantoms fled, and horses proud with braided mane,
with shining bit and silver rein, went fleeting by on moonlit night, as swallows arrow-swift in flight; 90
a blowing and a sound of bells,
a hidden hunt in hollow dells.

There songs were made and things of gold, and silver cups and jewels untold,
and the endless years of Faëry land 95
rolled over far Beleriand,
until a day beneath the sun, when many marvels were begun.

NOTES

The opening of the poem in B is complicated by the fact that my father partly rewrote, and retyped, the first Canto – a rewriting entirely distinct from the later fundamental recasting that the early part of the poem underwent. This first rewriting of the opening Canto was done while the original composition of the poem was still proceeding, but was fairly far advanced. The second version was typed in exactly the same form as that it replaced, whereas the last part of the B-text is not typed; but the name Beleriand appears in it, as typed, and not as an emendation, whereas elsewhere in B the form is Broseliand, always emended in ink to Beleriand.^{*} Moreover it was the first version of Canto I in the B-text that C. S. Lewis read on the night of 6 December 1929, and I think it very probable that it was Lewis's criticism that led my father to rewrite the opening (see pp. 315–16). In the following notes the first version of B is called B(1), the rewritten text given above being B(2).

1–30	A:	A king was in the dawn of days: his golden crown did brightly blaze with ruby red and crystal clear; his meats were sweet, his dishes dear; red robes of silk, an ivory throne,	5 and ancient halls of archéd stone, and wine and music lavished free, and thirty champions and three, all these he had and heeded not. His daughter dear was Melilot:	10 from dawn to dusk, from sun to sea, no fairer maiden found could be. Her robe was blue as summer skies, but not so blue as were her eyes; 'twas sewn with golden lilies fair,	15 but none so golden as her hair.

An earlier draft, after line 12 found could be, has the couplet:

from England unto Eglamar
o'er folk and field and lands afar.

B(1): A king there was in olden days:
&c. as A to line 6

and hoarded gold in gleaming grot, all these he had and heeded not.
But fairer than are born to Men
a daughter had he, Lúthien:
&c. as B(2)

14-18 These lines were used afterwards in Gimli's song in Moria (The Fellowship of the Ring II. 4); see the Commentary by C. S. Lewis, p. 316.

41-4 A: They dwelt in dark Broceliand
while loneliness yet held the land.

B(1): They dwelt beyond Broseliand
while loneliness yet held the land, in the forest dark of Doriath.
Few ever thither found the path;

In B(1) Ossiriande is pencilled above Broseliand. As noted above, B(2) has Beleriand as typed.

48 After this line A and B(1) have:

Yet came at whiles afar and dim beneath the roots of mountains grim
a blowing and a sound of bells,
a hidden hunt in hollow dells.

The second couplet reappears at a later point in B(2), lines 91-2.

49-61 A and B(1):

To North there lay the Land of Dread,
whence only evil pathways led
o'er hills of shadow bleak and cold;
to West and South the oceans rolled unsailed and shoreless, wild and wide;
to East and East the hills did hide beneath the tangled woodland shade,

65-6 A: There Celegorm his ageless days doth wear amid the woven ways, the glimmering aisles and endless naves whose pillared feet that river laves

67 Esgalduin A, but Esgaduin in the rough workings, which is the form in The Children of Húrin (p. 76, line 2164) before correction.

73 A: There Melilot the lissom maid

79-84 Not in A.

85-93 A and B(1) (with one slight difference):

There bow was bent and shaft was sped
and deer as fallow phantoms fled, and horses pale with harness bright went jingling by on moonlit night;
there songs were made and things of gold

See note to line 48.

96 A: rolled over dark Broceliand,
B(1): rolled over far Broseliand,
In B(1) Ossiriande is pencilled against Broseliand, as at line 41.

Commentary on Canto I

An extraordinary feature of the A-version is the name Celegorm given to the King of the woodland Elves (Thingol); moreover in the next Canto the rôle of Beren is in A played by Maglor, son of Egnor. The only possible conclusion, strange as it is, is that my father was prepared to abandon Thingol for Celegorm and (even more astonishing) Beren for Maglor. Both Celegorm and Maglor as sons of Fëanor have appeared in the Tale of the Nauglafring and in the Lay of the Children of Húrin.

The name of the king's daughter in A, Melilot, is also puzzling (and is it the English plant-name, as in Melilot Brandybuck, a guest at Bilbo Baggins' farewell party?). Already in the second version of The Children of Húrin Lúthien has appeared as the 'true' name of Tinúviel (see p. 119, note to 358–66). It is perhaps possible that my father in fact began the Lay of Leithian before he stopped work on The Children of Húrin, in which case Melilot might be the first 'true' name of Tinúviel, displaced by Lúthien; but I think that this is extremely unlikely.* In view of Beren > Maglor, I think Lúthien > Melilot far more probable. In any event, Beren and Lúthien soon appear in the original drafts of the Lay of Leithian.

It is strange also that in A the king's daughter was blue-eyed and golden-haired, for this would not accord with the robe of darkness that she spun from her hair: in the Tale of Tinúviel her hair was 'dark' (II. 20).

The name Broceliand that appears in A (Broseliand B) is remarkable, but I can cast no light on my father's choice of this name (the famous Forest of Broceliande in Brittany of the Arthurian legends).* It would be interesting to know how Broseliand led to Beleriand, and a clue may perhaps be found on a page of rough working for the opening of the Lay, where he jotted down various names that must be possibilities that he was pondering for the name of the land. The fact that Ossiriand occurs among them, while it is also pencilled against Broseliand at lines 41 and 96 in B(1), may suggest that these names arose during the search for a replacement of Broseliand. The names are:

Golodhinand, Noldórinan, Geleriand, Bladorinand, Belaurien, Arsiriand, Lassiriand, Ossiriand.

Golodhinand is incidentally interesting as showing Golodh, the later Sindarin equivalent of Quenya Noldo (in the old Gnomish dictionary Golda was the Gnomish equivalent of 'Elvish' Noldo, I. 262). Geleriand I can cast no light on; but Belaurien is obviously connected with Belaurin, the Gnomish form of Palúrien (I. 264), and Bladorinand with Palúrien's name Bladorwen 'the wide earth, Mother Earth' (ibid.). It seems at least possible that Belauren lies behind Beleriand (which was afterwards explained quite differently).

Another curious feature is the word beyond in They dwelt beyond Broseliand, the reading of B(1) at line 41, where A has in and B(2) has amid.

Esga(l)duin, Taur-na-Fuin (for Taur Fuin of the Lost Tales), and the Thousand Caves have all appeared in The Children of Húrin; but in the mountains that

to East in peaks of blue were piled
in silence folded, mist-enfurled

– lines that are absent from A and B(1) – we have the first appearance of the Blue Mountains (Ered Luin) of the later legends: fencing Beleriand, as it seems, from the Outer World.

In all the texts of the first Canto the King of the woodland Elves is presented as possessing great wealth. This conception appears already in The Children of Húrin (see p. 26), in the most marked contrast to all that is told in the Lost Tales: cf. the Tale of Turambar (II. 95) ‘the folk of Tinwelint were of the woodlands and had scant wealth’, ‘his riches were small’, and the Tale of the Nauglafring (II. 227) ‘A golden crown they [the Dwarves] made for Tinwelint, who yet had worn nought but a wreath of scarlet leaves.’

II

Far in the North neath hills of stone in caverns black there was a throne
by fires illumined underground, that winds of ice with moaning sound made flare and flicker in dark smoke;

the wavering bitter coils did choke
the sunless airs of dungeons deep 105 where evil things did crouch and creep.
There sat a king: no Elfin race nor mortal blood, nor kindly grace of earth or heaven might he own, far older, stronger than the stone 110 the world is built of, than the fire that burns within more fierce and dire;
and thoughts profound were in his heart:
a gloomy power that dwelt apart.

Unconquerable spears of steel 115 were at his nod. No ruth did feel the legions of his marshalled hate, on whom did wolf and raven wait;
and black the ravens sat and cried upon their banners black, and wide 120 was heard their hideous chanting dread above the reek and trampled dead.
With fire and sword his ruin red on all that would not bow the head like lightning fell. The Northern land 125 lay groaning neath his ghastly hand.

But still there lived in hiding cold
undaunted, Barahir the bold, of land bereaved, of lordship shorn,
who once a prince of Men was born 130
and now an outlaw lurked and lay
in the hard heath and woodland grey,
and with him clung of faithful men but Beren his son and other ten.

Yet small as was their hunted band 135 still fell and fearless was each hand, and strong deeds they wrought yet oft,
and loved the woods, whose ways more soft them seemed than thralls of that black throne to live and languish in halls of stone. 140 King Morgoth still pursued them sore with men and dogs, and wolf and boar with spells of madness filled he sent to slay them as in the woods they went;
yet nought hurt them for many years, 145 until, in brief to tell what tears have oft bewailed in ages gone, nor ever tears enough, was done a deed unhappy; unaware their feet were caught in Morgoth's snare. 150

Gorlim it was, who wearying of toil and flight and harrying, one night by chance did turn his feet o'er the dark fields by stealth to meet with hidden friend within a dale, 155 and found a homestead looming pale against the misty stars, all dark save one small window, whence a spark of fitful candle strayed without.
Therein he peeped, and filled with doubt 160
he saw, as in a dreaming deep when longing cheats the heart in sleep, his wife beside a dying fire lament him lost; her thin attire and greying hair and paling cheek 165 of tears and loneliness did speak.

'A! fair and gentle Eilinel, whom I had thought in darkling hell long since emprisoned! Ere I fled I deemed I saw thee slain and dead 170 upon that night of sudden fear when all I lost that I held dear':
thus thought his heavy heart amazed outside in darkness as he gazed.
But ere he dared to call her name, 175 or ask how she escaped and came to this far vale beneath the hills, he heard a cry beneath the hills!
There hooted near a hunting owl with boding voice. He heard the howl 180 of the wild wolves that followed him and dogged his feet through shadows dim.
Him unrelenting, well he knew,
the hunt of Morgoth did pursue.
Lest Eilinel with him they slay 185 without a word he turned away, and like a wild thing winding led his devious ways o'er stony bed of stream, and over quaking fen, until far from the homes of men 190 he lay beside his fellows few in a secret place; and darkness grew,
and waned, and still he watched unsleeping, and saw the dismal dawn come creeping in dank heavens above gloomy trees. 195
A sickness held his soul for ease, and hope, and even thraldom's chain

if he might find his wife again.
But all he thought twixt love of lord and hatred of the king abhorred 200 and anguish for fair Eilinel who drooped alone, what tale shall tell?

Yet at the last, when many days of brooding did his mind amaze, he found the servants of the king, 205 and bade them to their master bring a rebel who forgiveness sought, if haply forgiveness might be bought with tidings of Barahir the bold, and where his hidings and his hold 210 might best be found by night or day.
And thus sad Gorlim, led away unto those dark deep-dolven halls, before the knees of Morgoth falls, and puts his trust in that cruel heart 215 wherein no truth had ever part.
Quoth Morgoth: 'Eilinel the fair thou shalt most surely find, and there where she doth dwell and wait for thee together shall ye ever be, 220 and sundered shall ye sigh no more.
This guerdon shall he have that bore these tidings sweet, O traitor dear!
For Eilinel she dwells not here, but in the shades of death doth roam 225 widowed of husband and of home -
a wraith of that which might have been,

methinks, it is that thou hast seen!
Now shalt thou through the gates of pain the land thou askest grimly gain; 230 thou shalt to the moonless mists of hell descend and seek thy Eilinel.'

Thus Gorlim died a bitter death
and cursed himself with dying breath, and Barahir was caught and slain, 235 and all good deeds were made in vain.

But Morgoth's guile for ever failed, nor wholly o'er his foes prevailed, and some were ever that still fought unmaking that which malice wrought. 240

Thus men believed that Morgoth made the fiendish phantom that betrayed the soul of Gorlim, and so brought the lingering hope forlorn to nought that lived amid the lonely wood; 245

yet Beren had by fortune good long hunted far afield that day, and benighted in strange places lay far from his fellows. In his sleep he felt a dreadful darkness creep 250

upon his heart, and thought the trees were bare and bent in mournful breeze;
no leaves they had, but ravens dark sat thick as leaves on bough and bark, and croaked, and as they croaked each neb 255 let fall a gout of blood; a web unseen entwined him hand and limb, until worn out, upon the rim of stagnant pool he lay and shivered.

There saw he that a shadow quivered 260 far out upon the water wan, and grew to a faint form thereon that glided o'er the silent lake, and coming slowly, softly spake and sadly said: 'Lo! Gorlim here, 265 traitor betrayed, now stands! Nor fear, but haste! For Morgoth's fingers close upon thy father's throat. He knows your secret tryst, your hidden lair', and all the evil he laid bare 270 that he had done and Morgoth wrought.
Then Beren waking swiftly sought his sword and bow, and sped like wind that cuts with knives the branches thinned of autumn trees. At last he came, 275 his heart afire with burning flame, where Barahir his father lay;
he came too late. At dawn of day he found the homes of hunted men, a wooded island in the fen, 280 and birds rose up in sudden cloud – no fen-fowl were they crying loud.
The raven and the carrion-crow
sat in the alders all a-row; one croaked: 'Ha! Beren comes too late', 285 and answered all: 'Too late! Too late!'
There Beren buried his father's bones, and piled a heap of boulder-stones,
and cursed the name of Morgoth thrice, but wept not, for his heart was ice. 290

Then over fen and field and mountain he followed, till beside a fountain upgushing hot from fires below
he found the slayers and his foe, the murderous soldiers of the king. 295
And one there laughed, and showed a ring he took from Barahir's dead hand.
'This ring in far Beleriand,
now mark ye, mates,' he said, 'was wrought.
Its like with gold could not be bought, 300
for this same Barahir I slew, this robber fool, they say, did do a deed of service long ago for Felagund. It may be so;
for Morgoth bade me bring it back, 305 and yet, methinks, he has no lack of weightier treasure in his hoard.
Such greed befits not such a lord, and I am minded to declare the hand of Barahir was bare!' 310
Yet as he spake an arrow sped;
with riven heart he crumpled dead.
Thus Morgoth loved that his own foe should in his service deal the blow that punished the breaking of his word. 315
But Morgoth laughed not when he heard that Beren like a wolf alone sprang madly from behind a stone amid that camp beside the well, and seized the ring, and ere the yell 320 of wrath and rage had left their throat had fled his foes. His gleaming coat was made of rings of steel no shaft could pierce, a web of dwarvish craft; and he was lost in rock and thorn, 325

for in charmed hour was Beren born; their hungry hunting never learned the way his fearless feet had turned.

As fearless Beren was renowned,
as man most hardy upon ground, 330 while Barahir yet lived and fought;
but sorrow now his soul had wrought to dark despair, and robbed his life of sweetness, that he longed for knife, or shaft, or sword, to end his pain, 335
and dreaded only thraldom's chain.
Danger he sought and death pursued,
and thus escaped the fate he wooed, and deeds of breathless wonder dared whose whispered glory widely fared, 340 and softly songs were sung at eve of marvels he did once achieve alone, beleaguered, lost at night by mist or moon, or neath the light of the broad eye of day. The woods 345 that northward looked with bitter feuds he filled and death for Morgoth's folk;
his comrades were the beech and oak,
who failed him not, and many things with fur and fell and feathered wings; 350
and many spirits, that in stone
in mountains old and wastes alone,
do dwell and wander, were his friends.

Yet seldom well an outlaw ends,
and Morgoth was a king more strong 355
than all the world has since in song recorded, and his wisdom wide slow and surely who him defied did hem and hedge. Thus at the last must Beren flee the forest fast 360 and lands he loved where lay his sire by reeds bewailed beneath the mire.
Beneath a heap of mossy stones now crumble those once mighty bones, but Beren flees the friendless North 365
one autumn night, and creeps him forth;
the leaguer of his watchful foes
he passes – silently he goes.
No more his hidden bowstring sings, no more his shaven arrow wings, 370 no more his hunted head doth lie upon the heath beneath the sky.
The moon that looked amid the mist upon the pines, the wind that hissed among the heather and the fern 375 found him no more. The stars that burn about the North with silver fire in frosty airs, the Burning Briar that Men did name in days long gone, were set behind his back, and shone 380
o'er land and lake and darkened hill, forsaken fen and mountain rill.

His face was South from the Land of Dread,
whence only evil pathways led,

and only the feet of men most bold	385 might cross the Shadowy Mountains cold.
Their northern slopes were filled with woe, with evil and with mortal foe;
their southern faces mounted sheer
in rocky pinnacle and pier,	390
whose roots were woven with deceit and washed with waters bitter-sweet.
There magic lurked in gulf and glen,
for far away beyond the ken of searching eyes, unless it were	395 from dizzy tower that pricked the air where only eagles lived and cried, might grey and gleaming be descried Beleriand, Beleriand,
the borders of the faëry land.	400

NOTES

- | | | |
|------|------------------|---|
| 128 | A: | a lord of Men undaunted, bold |
| 134 | A: | Maglor his son and other ten. |
| 141 | A: | But the king Bauglir did hunt them sore |
| 177– | Earlier reading: | |
| 9 | | to this far vale among the hills a haggard hungry people tills,
there hooted nigh a hunting owl |
| 205 | found: | earlier reading sought |
| 209– | A: | with tidings of Lord Egnor's band, |

10 and where their hidings in the land
 235 A: and Egnor was betrayed and slain 246 A: yet Maglor it was by fortune good who hunting &c.
 272 A: till Maglor waking swiftly sought 277 A: to where his father Egnor lay; 297 A: he took from Egnor's slaughtered hand:
 298 Broceliand A, Broseliand B emended to Beleriand
 301 A: for this same Egnor that I slew 304 Celegorm A, emended to Felagoth and then to Felagund
 310 A: I found the hand of Egnor bare!
 313– These four lines were bracketed, and 16 that at line 317 changed to Then, before the B-text went to C. S. Lewis (my father's numbering of the lines excludes these four, and Lewis's line-references agree). Lewis did not concur with the exclusion of 313–14, and I have let all four lines stand. See pp. 318–19.
 317, Maglor A, Beren B
 329
 326 A: and deep ghylls in the mountains torn.
 331– A: ere Egnor in the wilderness

- 3 was slain; but now his loneliness, grief and despair, did rob his life
- 360 A: proud Maglor fled the forest fast (fast is used in the sense 'secure against attack'; cf. fastness).
- 365 Maglor A, Beren B
- 377– A: about the North with silver flame 81 in frosty airs, that men did name Timbridhil in the days long gone, he set behind his back, and shone that sickle of the heavenly field that Bridhil Queen of stars did wield
o'er land and lake and darkened hill,
The fifth and sixth lines are bracketed, with and shone in the fourth changed to It shone.
- 383– Cf. lines 49–50.
4
- 399 Broceliand A, Broseliand B emended
to Beleriand.

Commentary on Canto II

In this second Canto the story of the betrayal of the outlaw band is already in A close to its final form in essentials; but there is no trace of the story in any form earlier than the first drafts of the Lay of Leithian, composed in the summer of 1925 (see p. 150). In commenting on the Tale of Tinúviel I noted (II. 52):

It seems clear that at this time the history of Beren and his father (Egnor) was only very sketchily devised; there is in any case no hint of the story of the outlaw band led by his father and its betrayal by Gorlim the Unhappy before the first form of the Lay of Leithian.

There are indeed differences in the plot of the Lay from the story told in The Silmarillion (pp. 162 ff.): thus the house where Gorlim saw the phantom of Eilinel was not in the Lay his own; his treachery was far deeper and more deliberate, in that he sought out the servants of Morgoth with the intention of revealing the hiding-place of the outlaws; and he came before Morgoth himself (not Thû-Sauron). But these differences are much outnumbered by the similarities, such as the absence of Maglor-Beren on the fatal day, the apparition of Gorlim coming to him in dream across the water of the lake, the carrion-birds in the alder-trees, the cairn, the seizing of the ring, his friendship with birds and beasts.

As regards the names in the A-text: Gorlim and Eilinel were to remain. Maglor-Beren has already been discussed (p. 159). Egnor was still his father, as in the Lost Tales (the emendation to Barahir in the second version of the Tale of Tinúviel, ll. 43, was a change made casually years later). Bauglir (which entered during the composition of The Children of Húrin, see p. 52) is changed throughout to Morgoth, but this seems not to have been a rejection of the name, since it appears later in the B-text of the Lay, and survives in The Silmarillion.

In A Varda is called Bridhil (note to lines 377–81), as she is also in the alliterative poem The Flight of the Noldoli (pp. 135, 139); but it is puzzling that the constellation of the Great Bear is in the same passage called Timbridhil, for that according to the old Gnomish dictionary is the title of Varda herself (as one would expect: cf. Tinwetári, l. 269). The ‘Sickle of the Gods’ (Valacirca) is here the ‘sickle of the heavenly field’ wielded by Bridhil Queen of Stars. I can cast no light at all on the name Burning Briar that appears in B (line 378); it reappears in the 1930 version of ‘The Silmarillion’:

Many names have these [the Seven Stars] been called,
but in the old days of the North both Elves and Men called them the Burning Briar, and some the Sickle of the Gods.

For the earliest myth of the Great Bear see I. 114, 133.

Indications of geography are sparse, and not increased in the B-text. Taur-na-Fuin has been named earlier in B (line 52), but it is not actually said in the present Canto to be the region where the outlaws lurked, though there is no reason to doubt that this is where my father placed it. Coming southwards Maglor-Beren crossed 'the Shadowy Mountains cold' (386). The Shadowy Mountains were named several times in The Children of Húrin, where they are the mountains fencing Hithlum, mirrored in the pools of Ivrin, as they are in The Silmarillion. But it would obviously be impossible for Beren to cross the Shadowy Mountains in this application of the name if he were coming out of Taur-na-Fuin and moving south towards Doriath. In the 'Sketch of the Mythology' Beren likewise 'crosses the Shadowy Mountains and after grievous hardships comes to Doriath', and similarly in the 1930 version; in this latter, however, 'Mountains of Shadow' was emended to 'Mountains of Terror'. It is then clear that in the Lay of Leithian my father was using 'Shadowy Mountains' in a different sense from that in The Children of Húrin, and that the Shadowy Mountains of the present Canto are the first mention of Ered Gorgoroth, the Mountains of Terror, 'the precipices in which Dorthonion [Taur-nu-Fuin] fell southward' (The Silmarillion p. 95); but the other meaning reappears (p. 234).

The lake where Egnor-Barahir and his band dwelt in hiding, in The Silmarillion (p. 162) Tarn Aeluin, is not named in the Lay, where the hiding-place was 'a wooded island in the fen' (280). That the Orc-camp was beside a spring (also unnamed) appears in the Lay, and it is here a hot spring (292-3); in The Silmarillion (p. 163) it was Rivil's Well above the Fen of Serech.

Most notable of the features of this Canto so far as the development of the legends is concerned, the rescue of Felagund by Barahir in the Battle of Sudden Flame (The Silmarillion p. 152) makes its first appearance in the 'service' done to Celegorm by Egnor in A (lines 301-4, where B has Felagund and Barahir). 'Celegorm' has already ceased its brief life as a replacement of Thingol (see p. 159), and is now again that of one of the sons of Fëanor, as it was in The Children of Húrin. When these lines in A were written the story was that Celegorm \(and Curufin\) founded Nargothrond after the breaking of the Leaguer of Angband – a story that seems to have arisen in the writing of The Children of Húrin, see pp. 83-5; and it was Celegorm who was rescued by Egnor-Barahir in that battle, and who gave Egnor-Barahir his ring. In the B-text the story has moved forward again, with the emergence of (Felagoth >) Felagund as the one saved by Barahir and the founder of Nargothrond, thrusting Celegorm and Curufin into a very different rôle.

In A Egnor and his son Maglor (Beren) are Men (e.g. Egnor was 'a lord of Men', note to line 128). In the first version of The Children of Húrin Beren was still an Elf, while in the second version my father seems to have changed back and forth on this matter (see pp. 124-5). He had not even now, as will appear later, finally settled the question.

There once, and long and long ago, before the sun and moon we know were lit to sail above the world, when first the shaggy woods unfurled, and shadowy shapes did stare and roam

beneath the dark and starry dome that hung above the dawn of Earth,
the silences with silver mirth
were shaken; the rocks were ringing, the birds of Melian were singing, 410
the first to sing in mortal lands, the nightingales with her own hands she fed, that fay of garments grey;
and dark and long her tresses lay beneath her silver girdle's seat 415
and down unto her silver feet.

She had wayward wandered on a time from gardens of the Gods, to climb the everlasting mountains free that look upon the outmost sea, 420 and never wandered back, but stayed and softly sang from glade to glade.
Her voice it was that Thingol heard,
and sudden singing of a bird, in that old time when new-come Elves 425 had all the wide world to themselves.
Yet all his kin now marched away,
as old tales tell, to seek the bay
on the last shore of mortal lands,
where mighty ships with magic hands 430
they made, and sailed beyond the seas.
The Gods them bade to lands of ease and gardens fair, where earth and sky together flow, and none shall die.
But Thingol stayed, enchanted, still, 435 one moment to hearken to the thrill of that sweet singing in the trees.

Enchanted moments such as these from gardens of the Lord of Sleep, where fountains play and shadows creep, 440 do come, and count as many years in mortal lands. With many tears his people seek him ere they sail, while Thingol listens in the dale.
There after but an hour, him seems, 445
he finds her where she lies and dreams, pale Melian with her dark hair upon a bed of leaves. Beware!
There slumber and a sleep is twined!
He touched her tresses and his mind 450 was drowned in the forgetful deep,
and dark the years rolled o'er his sleep.

Thus Thingol sailed not on the seas but dwelt amid the land of trees, and Melian he loved, divine, 455 whose voice was potent as the wine the Valar drink in golden halls where flower blooms and fountain falls;
but when she sang it was a spell,
and no flower stirred nor fountain fell. 460
A king and queen thus lived they long, and Doriath was filled with song, and all the Elves that missed their way and never found the western bay, the gleaming walls of their long home 465
by the grey seas and the white foam, who never trod the golden land where the towers of the Valar stand, all these were gathered in their realm beneath the beech and oak and elm. 470

In later days when Morgoth first, fleeing the Gods, their bondage burst,
and on the mortal lands set feet,
and in the North his mighty seat founded and fortified, and all 475 the newborn race of Men were thrall unto his power, and Elf and Gnome his slaves, or wandered without home, or scattered fastnesses walled with fear upraised upon his borders drear, 480 and each one fell, yet reigned there still in Doriath beyond his will Thingol and deathless Melian, whose magic yet no evil can that cometh from without surpass. 485 Here still was laughter and green grass, and leaves were lit with the white sun,
and many marvels were begun.

In sunshine and in sheen of moon, with silken robe and silver shoon, 490
the daughter of the deathless queen now danced on the undying green, half elven-fair and half divine;
and when the stars began to shine unseen but near a piping woke, 495 and in the branches of an oak,
or seated on the beech-leaves brown,

Dairon the dark with ferny crown played with bewildering wizard's art music for breaking of the heart. 500 Such players have there only been thrice in all Elfinesse, I ween: Tinfang Gelion who still the moon enchants on summer nights of June and kindles the pale firstling star; 505 and he who harps upon the far forgotten beaches and dark shores
where western foam for ever roars, Maglor whose voice is like the sea;
and Dairon, mightiest of the three. 510

Now it befell on summer night, upon a lawn where lingering light yet lay and faded faint and grey, that Lúthien danced while he did play.
The chestnuts on the turf had shed 515 their flowering candles, white and red;
there darkling stood a silent elm and pale beneath its shadow-helm there glimmered faint the umbels thick of hemlocks like a mist, and quick 520 the moths on pallid wings of white with tiny eyes of fiery light were fluttering softly, and the voles crept out to listen from their holes; the little owls were hushed and still; 525
the moon was yet behind the hill.
Her arms like ivory were gleaming,
her long hair like a cloud was streaming,

her feet atwinkle wandered roaming in misty mazes in the gloaming; 530 and glowworms shimmered round her feet, and moths in moving garland fleet above her head went wavering wan – and this the moon now looked upon, uprisen slow, and round, and white, 535 above the branches of the night.
Then clearly thrilled her voice and rang;
with sudden ecstasy she sang a song of nightingales she learned and with her elvish magic turned 540 to such bewildering delight the moon hung moveless in the night.
And this it was that Beren heard,
and this he saw, without a word, enchanted dumb, yet filled with fire 545 of such a wonder and desire that all his mortal mind was dim;
her magic bound and fettered him,
and faint he leaned against a tree.
Forwandered, wayworn, gaunt was he, 550 his body sick and heart gone cold, grey in his hair, his youth turned old;
for those that tread that lonely way
a price of woe and anguish pay.
And now his heart was healed and slain 555 with a new life and with new pain.

He gazed, and as he gazed her hair within its cloudy web did snare the silver moonbeams sifting white between the leaves, and glinting bright 560 the tremulous starlight of the skies was caught and mirrored in her eyes.

Then all his journey's lonely fare,
the hunger and the haggard care, the awful mountains' stones he stained 565 with blood of weary feet, and gained only a land of ghosts, and fear in dark ravines imprisoned sheer – there mighty spiders wove their webs, old creatures foul with birdlike nebs 570 that span their traps in dizzy air, and filled it with clinging black despair, and there they lived, and the sucked bones lay white beneath on the dank stones – now all these horrors like a cloud 575 faded from mind. The waters loud falling from pineclad heights no more he heard, those waters grey and frore that bittersweet he drank and filled his mind with madness – all was stilled. 580
He recked not now the burning road, the paths demented where he strode endlessly ... and ever new horizons stretched before his view, as each blue ridge with bleeding feet 585 was climbed, and down he went to meet battle with creatures old and strong and monsters in the dark, and long, long watches in the haunted night while evil shapes with baleful light 590 in clustered eyes did crawl and snuff beneath his tree – not half enough the price he deemed to come at last to that pale moon when day had passed, to those clear stars of Elfinesse, 595

the hearts-ease and the loveliness.

Lo! all forgetting he was drawn unheeding toward the glimmering lawn by love and wonder that compelled his feet from hiding; music welled 600 within his heart, and songs unmade on themes unthought-of moved and swayed his soul with sweetness; out he came,

a shadow in the moon's pale flame – and Dairon's flute as sudden stops 605 as lark before it steeply drops,

as grasshopper within the grass listening for heavy feet to pass.
'Flee, Lúthien!', and 'Lúthien!' from hiding Dairon called again; 610
'A stranger walks the woods! Away!'

But Lúthien would wondering stay;
fear had she never felt or known,
till fear then seized her, all alone, seeing that shape with shagged hair 615 and shadow long that halted there.

Then sudden she vanished like a dream in dark oblivion, a gleam in hurrying clouds, for she had leapt among the hemlocks tall, and crept 620 under a mighty plant with leaves all long and dark, whose stem in sheaves upheld an hundred umbels fair;

and her white arms and shoulders bare her raiment pale, and in her hair 625
the wild white roses glimmering there, all lay like spattered moonlight hoar in gleaming pools upon the floor.
Then stared he wild in dumbness bound
at silent trees, deserted ground; 630
he blindly groped across the glade to the dark trees' encircling shade, and, while she watched with veiled eyes, touched her soft arm in sweet surprise.
Like startled moth from deathlike sleep 635 in sunless nook or bushes deep she darted swift, and to and fro with cunning that elvish dancers know about the trunks of trees she twined a path fantastic. Far behind 640 enchanted, wildered and forlorn Beren came blundering, bruised and torn:
Esgalduin the elven-stream, in which amid tree-shadows gleam the stars, flowed strong before his feet. 645
Some secret way she found, and fleet passed over and was seen no more,
and left him forsaken on the shore.
'Darkly the sundering flood rolls past!
To this my long way comes at last - 650
a hunger and a loneliness, enchanted waters pitiless.'

A summer waned, an autumn glowed, and Beren in the woods abode, as wild and wary as a faun 655 that sudden wakes at rustling dawn, and flits from shade to shade, and flees the brightness of the sun, yet sees all stealthy movements in the wood.

The murmurous warmth in weathers good, 660 the hum of many wings, the call of many a bird, the pattering fall of sudden rain upon the trees,
the windy tide in leafy seas,
the creaking of the boughs, he heard; 665 but not the song of sweetest bird brought joy or comfort to his heart, a wanderer dumb who dwelt apart;
who sought unceasing and in vain to hear and see those things again: 670
a song more fair than nightingale, a wonder in the moonlight pale.

An autumn waned, a winter laid the withered leaves in grove and glade;
the beeches bare were gaunt and grey, 675
and red their leaves beneath them lay.
From cavern pale the moist moon eyes the white mists that from earth arise to hide the morrow's sun and drip all the grey day from each twig's tip. 680
By dawn and dusk he seeks her still;
by noon and night in valleys chill, nor hears a sound but the slow beat on sodden leaves of his own feet.

The wind of winter winds his horn; 685
the misty veil is rent and torn.
The wind dies; the starry choirs leap in the silent sky to fires, whose light comes bitter-cold and sheer through domes of frozen crystal clear. 690

A sparkle through the darkling trees, a piercing glint of light he sees,
and there she dances all alone upon a treeless knoll of stone!
Her mantle blue with jewels white 695 caught all the rays of frosted light.
She shone with cold and wintry flame, as dancing down the hill she came,
and passed his watchful silent gaze,
a glimmer as of stars ablaze. 700
And snowdrops sprang beneath her feet, and one bird, sudden, late and sweet, shrilled as she wayward passed along.
A frozen brook to bubbling song awoke and laughed; but Beren stood 705 still bound enchanted in the wood.
Her starlight faded and the night closed o'er the snowdrops glimmering white.

Thereafter on a hillock green he saw far off the elven-sheen 710 of shining limb and jewel bright often and oft on moonlit night;
and Dairon's pipe awoke once more,
and soft she sang as once before.

Then nigh he stole beneath the trees, 715 and heartache mingled with hearts-ease.

A night there was when winter died;
then all alone she sang and cried and danced until the dawn of spring, and chanted some wild magic thing 720 that stirred him, till it sudden broke the bonds that held him, and he woke to madness sweet and brave despair.

He flung his arms to the night air,
and out he danced unheeding, fleet, 725
enchanted, with enchanted feet.

He sped towards the hillock green,
the lissom limbs, the dancing sheen;
he leapt upon the grassy hill his arms with loveliness to fill: 730

his arms were empty, and she fled; away, away her white feet sped.
But as she went he swiftly came and called her with the tender name of nightingales in elvish tongue, 735 that all the woods now sudden rung:
'Tinúviel! Tinúviel!'

And clear his voice was as a bell;
its echoes wove a binding spell:
'Tinúviel! Tinúviel!' 740

His voice such love and longing filled one moment stood she, fear was stilled;
one moment only; like a flame he leaped towards her as she stayed and caught and kissed that elfin maid. 745

As love there woke in sweet surprise the starlight trembled in her eyes.

A! Lúthien! A! Lúthien!

more fair than any child of Men;

O! loveliest maid of Elfinesse, 750

what madness does thee now possess!

A! lissom limbs and shadowy hair and chaplet of white snowdrops there;

O! starry diadem and white pale hands beneath the pale moonlight! 755

She left his arms and slipped away

just at the breaking of the day.

NOTES

- 439 Original reading of B:
from gardens of the God of Sleep,
- 457 Original reading of B:
the Gods drink in their golden halls
- 467- Original reading of B: 8

who never passed the golden gate where doorwards of the Gods do wait,

These three changes are late, and their purpose is to remove the word Gods. The change in line 468 also gets rid of the purely metrical do in do wait; similarly did build and fortify > founded and fortified 475 and did raise > upraised 480 look as if they belong to the same time. On the other hand did flutter > were fluttering 523 and did waver > went wavering 533 seem to belong with the early emendations (see C. S. Lewis's commentary, pp. 320-1). I mention these changes here to illustrate my remarks on this subject, pp. 152-3.

- 493 elfin- B, emended to elven-. Here and subsequently this belongs with the early changes, as does elfin to elvish at 540, etc.
- 503 Tinfang Warble A, and B as typed; Gelion an early change in B.
- 508 After this line A has a couplet omitted in B:
from England unto Eglamar
on rock and dune and sandy bar,

The first of these lines occurs also in an early draft for the opening of the poem, see p. 157, note to lines 1–30.

- 509 Maglor A, B; in the rough draft of this passage Ivárë (with Maglor written beside it).
- 527–30 Marked in B with an X (i.e. in need of revision), but with no other verses substituted.
- 557 This line begins a new page in the A manuscript; at the top of the page is written the date ‘23/8/25’.
- 558 golden A, and B as typed (no doubt an oversight), early emended to cloudy. See note to lines 1–30, and pp. 159–60.
- 648 After this line the bundle of examination-scripts on which the A manuscript is written (p. 150) is interleaved with other pages, which carry the poem to the end of Canto III. At the bottom of the first of these pages is written Filey 1925, where my father was on holiday in September of that year.
- 743 The couplet lacks its second line. The passage 741–5 is a hasty revision, based on a criticism of Lewis’s; see his commentary, p. 325.

Commentary on Canto III

In this Canto there are many things that derive from the Tale of Tinúviel (II. 10 ff.): the chestnut trees, the white moths, the moon rising, the sudden ceasing of Dairon’s piping, Tinúviel’s unwillingness to flee, her hiding under the hemlocks like spattered moonlight (cf. II. 11 ‘like a spatter of moonlight shimmering’), Beren’s touching her arm, her darting between the tree-trunks, and afterwards the ‘treeless knoll’ where she danced in the winter. But the Canto is also related to the poem Light as Leaf on

Lindentree (see pp. 108–10, 120–2), which had been published in June 1925, while this part of the Lay of Leithian was written a little later in the same year. Echoes of the one poem are heard in the other, and more than an echo in the line and out he danced unheeding, fleet, which is found in both (p. 109, line 447; p. 179, line 725).

The aberrant names in the first two Cantos of A have now disappeared from the text. In the second Canto my father had already given back the name Celegorm to the son of Fëanor (note to line 304), and now Thingol appears in A; Lúthien replaces Melilot; and Beren replaces Maglor. Morgoth now replaces Bauglir in A (see p. 170).

In both texts Tinúviel is now explicitly the Elvish word for ‘nightingale’ (line 735; see p. 124); and Maglor, again in both texts, is the name of one of the three greatest singers of Elfinesse:

he who harps upon the far forgotten beaches and dark shores
where western foam for ever roars, Maglor whose voice is like the sea

(506–9)

In the rough draft of this passage the name of this minstrel is however Ivárë (though Maglor is written beside it), and Ivárë was named in the Tale of Tinúviel (ll. 10), with Tinfang and Dairon, as one of ‘the three most magic players of the Elves’, who ‘plays beside the sea’. This is the first hint of the after-history of Maglor son of Fëanor, who in the Tale of the Nauglafring (ll. 241) was slain, as also was Celegorm, in the attack on Dior. The lines in A, omitted in B (note to line 508), are interesting:

from England unto Eglamar
on rock and dune and sandy bar

The form Eglamar (Gnomish, = Eldamar) occurs in the very early poem The Shores of Faëry and its prose preface (ll. 262, 272); and the same line from England unto Eglamar is found in the rough workings of the beginning of the Lay (note to lines 1–30). The mention of England is a reminder that at this time the association of the legends with Eriol/Ælfwine was still very much alive, though there is no other indication of it in the Lay of Leithian.

Tinfang Warble reappears from the Lost Tales at line 503, changed to Tinfang Gelion; the meaning of Gelion is not explained.

In one respect only does the narrative content of the Canto depart in any significant way from the common ‘tradition’ of the texts, but this is sufficiently remarkable: the Elves departed over the sea to Valinor at the end of the Great Journey in a fleet of ships!

Yet all his kin now marched away,
as old tales tell, to seek the bay
on the last shore of mortal lands,
where mighty ships with magic hands
they made, and sailed beyond the seas.

(427–31)

This is very strange (and I am at a loss to account for it, except by the obvious explanation of a passing shift), in that the story of the ‘island-car’ (Tol Eressëa), which goes back to the Lost Tales (l. 118–20), is present in all the versions of ‘The Silmarillion’. The Elves are here presented, on the other hand, as great shipbuilders in the beginning of their days. – With the reference in the passage just cited to the bay whence the Elves set sail cf. The Silmarillion p. 57, where it is told that Ulmo anchored the ‘island-car’ in the Bay of Balar (and that the eastern horn of the island, breaking off, was the Isle of Balar).

In the description of Beren's journey to Doriath in lines 563 ff. is the first account of the Ered Gorgoroth, the Mountains of Terror (called 'the Shadowy Mountains' in Canto II, see pp. 170-1), with their spiders and their waters that drove mad those who drank from them (cf. The Silmarillion p. 121; and with lines 590-1 evil shapes with baleful light / in clustered eyes cf. ibid. p. 164: 'monsters ... hunting silently with many eyes').

IV

He lay upon the leafy mould, his face upon earth's bosom cold, asworn in overwhelming bliss, 760
enchanted of an elvish kiss, seeing within his darkened eyes
the light that for no darkness dies, the loveliness that doth not fade, though all in ashes cold be laid. 765 Then folded in the mists of sleep
he sank into abysses deep, drowned in an overwhelming grief for parting after meeting brief;
a shadow and a fragrance fair 770 lingered, and waned, and was not there.
Forsaken, barren, bare as stone,
the daylight found him cold, alone.

'Where art thou gone? The day is bare, the sunlight dark, and cold the air! 775
Tinúviel, where went thy feet?

O wayward star! O maiden sweet!
O flower of Elfland all too fair for mortal heart! The woods are bare!
The woods are bare!' he rose and cried. 780
'Ere spring was born, the spring hath died!
And wandering in path and mind
he groped as one gone sudden blind, who seeks to grasp the hidden light with faltering hands in more than night. 785

And thus in anguish Beren paid for that great doom upon him laid, the deathless love of Lúthien, too fair for love of mortal Men;
and in his doom was Lúthien snared, 790
the deathless in his dying shared;
and Fate them forged a binding chain of living love and mortal pain.

Beyond all hope her feet returned at eve, when in the sky there burned 795 the flame of stars; and in her eyes there trembled the starlight of the skies, and from her hair the fragrance fell of elvenflowers in elven-dell.

Thus Lúthien, whom no pursuit, 800 no snare, no dart that hunters shoot, might hope to win or hold, she came at the sweet calling of her name;
and thus in his her slender hand was linked in far Beleriand; 805

in hour enchanted long ago her arms about his neck did go, and gently down she drew to rest his weary head upon her breast.

A! Lúthien, Tinúviel, 810 why wentest thou to darkling dell with shining eyes and dancing pace, the twilight glimmering in thy face?
Each day before the end of eve
she sought her love, nor would him leave, 815 until the stars were dimmed, and day came glimmering eastward silver-grey.
Then trembling-veiled she would appear and dance before him, half in fear;
there flitting just before his feet 820
she gently chid with laughter sweet:
'Come! dance now, Beren, dance with me!
For fain thy dancing I would see.
Come! thou must woo with nimbler feet, than those who walk where mountains meet 825
the bitter skies beyond this realm of marvellous moonlit beech and elm.'

In Doriath Beren long ago
new art and lore he learned to know; his limbs were freed; his eyes alight, 830 kindled with a new enchanted sight;
and to her dancing feet his feet attuned went dancing free and fleet;
his laughter welled as from a spring of music, and his voice would sing 835 as voices of those in Doriath

where paved with flowers are floor and path.
The year thus on to summer rolled,
from spring to a summertime of gold.

Thus fleeting fast their short hour flies, 840 while Dairon watches with fiery eyes, haunting the gloom of tangled trees all day, until at night he sees in the fickle moon their moving feet, two lovers linked in dancing sweet, 845 two shadows shimmering on the green where lonely-dancing maid had been.

‘Hateful art thou, O Land of Trees!
May fear and silence on thee seize!
My flute shall fall from idle hand 850 and mirth shall leave Beleriand;
music shall perish and voices fail and trees stand dumb in dell and dale!’

It seemed a hush had fallen there upon the waiting woodland air; 855 and often murmured Thingol’s folk in wonder, and to their king they spoke:
‘This spell of silence who hath wrought?
What web hath Dairon’s music caught?
It seems the very birds sing low; 860 murmurless Esgalduin doth flow;
the leaves scarce whisper on the trees, and soundless beat the wings of bees!’

This Lúthien heard, and there the queen her sudden glances saw unseen. 865

But Thingol marvelled, and he sent for Dairon the piper, ere he went and sat upon his mounded seat – his grassy throne by the grey feet of the Queen of Beeches, Hirilorn, 870 upon whose triple piers were borne the mightiest vault of leaf and bough
from world's beginning until now.

She stood above Esgalduin's shore, where long slopes fell beside the door, 875
the guarded gates, the portals stark of the Thousand echoing Caverns dark.

There Thingol sat and heard no sound save far off footsteps on the ground;
no flute, no voice, no song of bird, 880
no choirs of windy leaves there stirred;
and Dairon coming no word spoke, silent amid the woodland folk.

Then Thingol said: 'O Dairon fair, thou master of all musics rare, 885
O magic heart and wisdom wild, whose ear nor eye may be beguiled,
what omen doth this silence bear?

What horn afar upon the air,
what summons do the woods await? 890

Mayhap the Lord Tavros from his gate and tree-propped halls, the forest-god, rides his wild stallion golden-shod amid the trumpets' tempest loud, amid his green-clad hunters proud, 895 leaving his deer and friths divine and emerald forests? Some faint sign of his great onset may have come upon the Western winds, and dumb the woods now listen for a chase 900 that here once more shall thundering race beneath the shade of mortal trees.

Would it were so! The Lands of Ease hath Tavros left not many an age, since Morgoth evil wars did wage, 905 since ruin fell upon the North and the Gnomes unhappy wandered forth.

But if not he, who comes or what?’
And Dairon answered: ‘He cometh not!
No feet divine shall leave that shore, 910
where the Shadowy Seas’ last surges roar,
till many things be come to pass,
and many evils wrought. Alas!

the guest is here. The woods are still,
but wait not; for a marvel chill 915
them holds at the strange deeds they see,
but kings see not – though queens, maybe,
may guess, and maidens, maybe, know.
Where one went lonely two now go!’

‘Whither thy riddle points is plain’ 920 the king in anger said, ‘but deign to make it plainer! Who is he that earns my wrath? How walks he free within my woods amid my folk,
a stranger to both beech and oak?’ 925

But Dairon looked on Lúthien and would he had not spoken then,
and no more would he speak that day,

though Thingol's face with wrath was grey.
Then Lúthien stepped lightly forth:	930 ‘Far in the mountain-leaguered North, my father,’ said she, ‘lies the land that groans beneath King Morgoth's hand.
Thence came one hither; bent and worn in wars and travail, who had sworn	935
undying hatred of that king;
the last of Bëor's sons, they sing, and even hither far and deep within thy woods the echoes creep through the wild mountain-passes cold,	940
the last of Bëor's house to hold a sword unconquered, neck unbowed, a heart by evil power uncowed.
No evil needst thou think or fear of Beren son of Barahir!	945
If aught thou hast to say to him, then swear to hurt not flesh nor limb,
and I will lead him to thy hall,
a son of kings, no mortal thrall.’
Then long King Thingol looked on her	950
while hand nor foot nor tongue did stir, and Melian, silent, unamazed, on Lúthien and Thingol gazed.
‘No blade nor chain his limbs shall mar’
the king then swore. ‘He wanders far,	955
and news, mayhap, he hath for me, and words I have for him, maybe!’
Now Thingol bade them all depart save Dairon, whom he called: ‘What art, what wizardry of Northern mist	960 hath this illcomer brought us? List!

Tonight go thou by secret path,
who knowest all wide Doriath, and watch that Lúthien – daughter mine, what madness doth thy heart entwine, 965 what web from Morgoth's dreadful halls hath caught thy feet and thee enthralls! – that she bid not this Beren flee back whence he came. I would him see!
Take with thee woodland archers wise. 970
Let naught beguile your hearts or eyes!'

Thus Dairon heavyhearted did,
and the woods were filled with watchers hid;
yet needless, for Lúthien that night led Beren by the golden light 975 of mounting moon unto the shore and bridge before her father's door; and the white light silent looked within the waiting portals yawning dim.

Downward with gentle hand she led 980 through corridors of carven dread whose turns were lit by lanterns hung or flames from torches that were flung on dragons hewn in the cold stone with jewelled eyes and teeth of bone. 985 Then sudden, deep beneath the earth
the silences with silver mirth
were shaken and the rocks were ringing,
the birds of Melian were singing;
and wide the ways of shadow spread 990

as into archéd halls she led Beren in wonder. There a light like day immortal and like night of stars unclouded, shone and gleamed.
A vault of topless trees it seemed, 995 whose trunks of carven stone there stood like towers of an enchanted wood in magic fast for ever bound, bearing a roof whose branches wound in endless tracery of green 1000 lit by some leaf-emprisoned sheen of moon and sun, and wrought of gems, and each leaf hung on golden stems.

Lo! there amid immortal flowers the nightingales in shining bowers 1005 sang o'er the head of Melian, while water for ever dripped and ran from fountains in the rocky floor.
There Thingol sat. His crown he wore of green and silver, and round his chair 1010
a host in gleaming armour fair.
Then Beren looked upon the king and stood amazed; and swift a ring of elvish weapons hemmed him round.
Then Beren looked upon the ground, 1015 for Melian's gaze had sought his face, and dazed there drooped he in that place,
and when the king spake deep and slow:
'Who art thou stumblest hither? Know that none unbidden seek this throne 1020 and ever leave these halls of stone!'
no word he answered, filled with dread.

But Lúthien answered in his stead:
'Behold, my father, one who came pursued by hatred like a flame! 1025

Lo! Beren son of Barahir!
What need hath he thy wrath to fear, foe of our foes, without a friend, whose knees to Morgoth do not bend?'

'Let Beren answer!' Thingol said. 1030
'What wouldst thou here? What hither led thy wandering feet, O mortal wild?
How hast thou Lúthien beguiled or darest thus to walk this wood unasked, in secret? Reason good 1035
'twere best declare now if thou may, or never again see light of day!'

Then Beren looked in Lúthien's eyes and saw a light of starry skies, and thence was slowly drawn his gaze 1040 to Melian's face. As from a maze of wonder dumb he woke; his heart the bonds of awe there burst apart and filled with the fearless pride of old;
in his glance now gleamed an anger cold. 1045

'My feet hath fate, O king,' he said,
'here over the mountains bleeding led,
and what I sought not I have found,
and love it is hath here me bound.
Thy dearest treasure I desire; 1050 nor rocks nor steel nor Morgoth's fire nor all the power of Elfinesse shall keep that gem I would possess.

For fairer than are born to Men
A daughter hast thou, Lúthien.' 1055

Silence then fell upon the hall;
like graven stone there stood they all,
save one who cast her eyes aground,
and one who laughed with bitter sound.
Dairon the piper leant there pale 1060 against a pillar. His fingers frail there touched a flute that whispered not;

his eyes were dark; his heart was hot.
'Death is the guerdon thou hast earned, O baseborn mortal, who hast learned 1065 in Morgoth's realm to spy and lurk like Orcs that do his evil work!'

'Death!' echoed Dairon fierce and low, but Lúthien trembling gasped in woe.
'And death,' said Thingol, 'thou shouldst taste, 1070 had I not sworn an oath in haste that blade nor chain thy flesh should mar.

Yet captive bound by never a bar, unchained, unfettered, shalt thou be in lightless labyrinth endlessly 1075 that coils about my halls profound by magic bewildered and enwound;
there wandering in hopelessness thou shalt learn the power of Elfinesse!'

'That may not be!' Lo! Beren spake, 1080 and through the king's words coldly brake.
'What are thy mazes but a chain wherein the captive blind is slain?
Twist not thy oaths, O elvish king,

like faithless Morgoth! By this ring –	1085
the token of a lasting bond that Felagund of Nargothrond once swore in love to Barahir, who sheltered him with shield and spear and saved him from pursuing foe	1090
on Northern battlefields long ago – death thou canst give unearned to me, but names I will not take from thee of baseborn, spy, or Morgoth's thrall!
Are these the ways of Thingol's hall?'	1095 Proud are the words, and all there turned to see the jewels green that burned in Beren's ring. These Gnomes had set as eyes of serpents twined that met beneath a golden crown of flowers,	1100 that one upholds and one devours:
the badge that Finrod made of yore and Felagund his son now bore.
His anger was chilled, but little less,
and dark thoughts Thingol did possess,	1105
though Melian the pale leant to his side and whispered: 'O king, forgo thy pride!
Such is my counsel. Not by thee shall Beren be slain, for far and free from these deep halls his fate doth lead,	1100 yet wound with thine. O king, take heed!'
But Thingol looked on Lúthien.
'Fairest of Elves! Unhappy Men, children of little lords and kings mortal and frail, these fading things,	1115 shall they then look with love on thee?'

his heart within him thought. 'I see thy ring,' he said, 'O mighty man!
But to win the child of Melian
a father's deeds shall not avail, 1120
nor thy proud words at which I quail.
A treasure dear I too desire, but rocks and steel and Morgoth's fire from all the powers of Elfinesse do keep the jewel I would possess. 1125 Yet bonds like these I hear thee say affright thee not. Now go thy way!
Bring me one shining Silmaril from Morgoth's crown, then if she will,
may Lúthien set her hand in thine; 1130
then shalt thou have this jewel of mine.'

Then Thingol's warriors loud and long they laughed; for wide renown in song had Fëanor's gems o'er land and sea,
the peerless Silmarils; and three 1135 alone he made and kindled slow in the land of the Valar long ago, and there in Tûn of their own light they shone like marvellous stars at night, in the great Gnomish hoards of Tûn, 1140 while Glingal flowered and Belthil's bloom yet lit the land beyond the shore
where the Shadowy Seas' last surges roar, ere Morgoth stole them and the Gnomes seeking their glory left their homes, 1145 ere sorrows fell on Elves and Men, ere Beren was or Lúthien, ere Fëanor's sons in madness swore their dreadful oath. But now no more their beauty was seen, save shining clear 1150 in Morgoth's dungeons vast and drear.

His iron crown they must adorn,
and gleam above Orcs and slaves forlorn, treasured in Hell above all wealth, more than his eyes; and might nor stealth 1155 could touch them, or even gaze too long upon their magic. Throng on throng of Orcs with reddened scimitars encircled him, and mighty bars and everlasting gates and walls, 1160 who wore them now amidst his thralls.

Then Beren laughed more loud than they in bitterness, and thus did say:

'For little price do elven-kings their daughters sell – for gems and rings 1165 and things of gold! If such thy will, thy bidding I will now fulfill.

On Beren son of Barahir thou hast not looked the last, I fear.
Farewell, Tinúviel, starlit maiden! 1170

Ere the pale winter pass snowladen,
I will return, not thee to buy with any jewel in Elfinesse, but to find my love in loveliness,
a flower that grows beneath the sky.' 1175

Bowing before Melian and the king he turned, and thrust aside the ring of guards about him, and was gone, and his footsteps faded one by one in the dark corridors. 'A guileful oath 1180 thou swore, father! Thou hast both to blade and chain his flesh now doomed in Morgoth's dungeons deep entombed,' said Lúthien, and welling tears sprang in her eyes, and hideous fears 1185 clutched at her heart. All looked away, and later remembered the sad day whereafter Lúthien no more sang.

Then clear in the silence the cold words rang of Melian: 'Counsel cunning-wise, 1190 O king!' she said. 'Yet if mine eyes lose not their power, 'twere well for thee that Beren failed his errantry.
Well for thee, but for thy child a dark doom and a wandering wild.' 1195

'I sell not to Men those whom I love' said Thingol, 'whom all things above I cherish; and if hope there were that Beren should ever living fare to the Thousand Caves once more, I swear 1200 he should not ever have seen the air or light of heaven's stars again.'
But Melian smiled, and there was pain as of far knowledge in her eyes;
for such is the sorrow of the wise. 1205

NOTES

The opening of this Canto is extant in two typescripts (to line 863), the second version being substantially expanded; it was the first of them that C. S. Lewis received – indeed, it is clear that the rewriting was in part due to his criticism.

- 758– The rough drafts for this portion of 863 the Lay (much briefer than the later text here printed) were written on the backs of booksellers' invoices dated 31 December 1925 and 2 February 1926.
- 761 In this Canto elvish rather than elfin is found already in A, but still elfin in both texts at 1164 (emended in B to elven-). elven- 799 occurs in a line found only in the later rewriting, B(2).
- 762– These lines are not in A; the B(1) 73 version, severely criticised by C. S. Lewis, is given with his commentary, p. 326.
- 781– A: and the bare woods nor moved nor sighed.
841 Yet ever after when star or moon shone clear or misty then came she soon just after day before the eve and found him, nor his side did leave
- 5
- until night waned and starlight ceased and day came pale o'er the pathless east.
 And there in far Broseliand
 he learned the touches of her hand;
 his feet grew swift as unseen airs,

his laughter soft, and far his cares, his voice like those in Doriath that wander where there runs no path.
Thus days of golden spring did rise while Dairon watched with fiery eyes

15

The spelling Broseliand with s has now entered the A-text.

B(1) is as A, except that between lines 7 and 8 above were inserted ten lines that my father retained in the much longer B(2) text, 818-27 (Then trembling-veiled, &c.)

805 Broseliand B (2), emended to Beleriand.

849-51 These verses are an emendation to B(2), with Beleriand thus written. For the B(1) version criticised by C. S. Lewis and the B(2) version before emendation see Lewis's commentary, p. 327.

891, 904 Tavros was emended in B to Tauros, but this seems to have been a much later change. The rough workings here had first the name (Ormain >) Ormaid, then Tavros.

937 Original reading of B: the last of Men, as songs now sing (with like echoes 939)

941 Original reading of B: the last of Men alone to hold 983-5 These lines are marked with an X on the B-text, and the words on dragons underlined and marked with an X – presumably because the creatures of Morgoth were not carved on the walls of the Thousand Caves.

987–9 These lines are repeated from Canto III, lines 408–10.

1010 silver: original reading of B gold.

1059–63 These lines are marked with an X on the B-text, as also are lines 1068–9. It may be that my father wished to represent Dairon as less unequivocally hostile to Beren, and also as ashamed of his words to Thingol (909–19).

1087 A: that Celegorm of Nargothrond with Celegorm... Emended first to Felagoth and then to Felagund (as at line 304).

1098 Gnomes: in the margin of B is written Elves/smiths. This is clearly a late change intended simply to get rid of the word Gnomes (see I. 43–4).

1102–3 A: the badge that Fëanor made of yore and Celegorm his son now bore. Celegorm is not emended here as it is at line 1087, but the couplet is enclosed within brackets in the manuscript.

1141 Glingal, Belthil: original readings of B Glingol, Bansil. The same changes were made in The Children of Húrin

- (pp. 80–1, notes to lines 2027–8), where I retain the earlier forms.
- 1144–
5 These lines are marked with an X on the B-text, perhaps simply because of the word Gnomes which here occurs in rhyme and cannot be easily replaced (see note to 1098); but C. S. Lewis criticised the word their in line 1145 as obscure in its reference (see his commentary, p. 329).
- 1151 A: in Morgoth Bauglir's dungeons drear. See p. 182.
- 1161 Here is written in the margin of the A manuscript: 'Mar. 27, 28 1928'.
- 1175 This line was not originally in A but was pencilled in with queried indications to place it either after 1172 or (with irregular rhyming) after 1174, as it is in B.

Commentary on Canto IV

Comparison of this Canto with the Tale of Tinúviel shows that the narrative has undergone a deepening of significance, and this is largely brought about by the cardinal change of Beren's being no longer an Elf but a mortal Man (see p. 171). The story told in the poem is that of The Silmarillion (pp. 165–8); for the prose version, close to the Lay in every feature large and small, and indeed in many actual phrases, was based directly on the verses, and in this Canto the verses underwent no significant later revision. There are some elements in the poem that were not taken up into the prose version, such as the description of the Thousand Caves (980 ff.), whose splendour and beauty now first appear (cf. my remarks on Thingol's wealth, pp. 160-1) – but a description of Thingol's dwelling is given earlier in The Silmarillion, p. 93. In the original text of the Silmarillion version Daeron's part was in fact entirely excluded, though obviously only for the sake of compression (it was reintroduced into the published work*). The loud laughter of Thingol's warriors at Thingol's demand that Beren fetch him a Silmaril is not in the prose account, and was perhaps deliberately excluded. This feature harks back rather to the scene in the Tale of Tinúviel (II. 13), where Thingol 'burst into laughter' at the aspect of Beren as suitor for his daughter, and where the courtiers smiled when Thingol requested a Silmaril as the bride-price, seeing that he 'treated the matter as an uncouth jest'. Cf. my commentary on the Tale, II. 53:

The tone is altogether lighter and less grave than it afterwards became; in the jeering laughter of Thingol, who treats the matter as a jest and Beren as a benighted fool, there is no hint of what is quite explicit in the later story: 'Thus he wrought the doom of Doriath, and was ensnared within the curse of Mandos.'

Canto III was in being by the autumn of 1925; while against Canto IV line 1161 in A there stands the date 27-8 March, 1928. The rough drafts for the opening of IV (lines 758-863) are written on the backs of invoices dated December 1925 and February 1926, but this does not show very much. In any case it seems to me most improbable that my father was writing lines 758-1161 over a period of two and a half years (September 1925 to March 1928): it is far more likely that there was a long gap, and that this fourth Canto was written pretty much at one time. Other evidence in fact suggests that he paused. There exist three pages of notes written on the backs of booksellers' invoices dated February, March, and May 1926, and these pages are of great interest for the development of the legend, for they contain a rapidly-composed plot-outline in which my father is seen working out the narrative of the next Cantos of the Lay.

This outline I will refer to as 'Synopsis I'. I give here its content as far as the end of Canto IV. Contractions used for names are expanded, and passages struck out (done at the time of writing) are included.

Beren and Tinúviel dance in the woods.

Dairon reports to the king.

Beren taken captive to the king.

Dairon will have him slain.

The king will shut him in his dungeons.

Tinúviel pleads.

Melian [struck out: says that he must not be slain, and that] refuses to advise but warns Thingol darkly that Beren must not be slain by him, and his coming was not without fate.

Thingol sends him for the Silmaril.

Beren's speech.

Melian says [struck out: this was better than his death, but] it were better for Thingol if Beren succeeded not.

Thingol said he would not send him if [he] were going to succeed. Melian smiles.

Flight of Beren.

In the Tale of Tinúviel Beren was led by Tinúviel into Thingol's caves (Il. 13), and as I noted (Il. 52-3):

The betrayal of Beren to Thingol by Dairon ... has no place in the old story – there is nothing to betray; and indeed it is not shown in the tale that Dairon knew anything whatsoever of Beren before Tinúviel led him into the cave, beyond having once seen his face in the moonlight.

Moreover, in the Tale Dairon was Tinúviel's brother (Il. 10; see p. 124). In the Lay (lines 909 ff.) Dairon utters strong hints concerning the strange quietness of the forest, which lead directly to a declaration by Lúthien of Beren's presence, and a demand that her father shall not harm him; Thingol swears that he will not, but sends Dairon with archers to prevent Beren's escape – needlessly, for Lúthien brings him that same night to Thingol's hall. This first part of Synopsis I suggests ideas that were never given form. Thus Dairon speaks to Thingol of Beren, as in the Lay, but Beren is actually apprehended and taken to the king as a prisoner; moreover (while it is of course impossible to be certain of the precise articulation of the plot from such an extremely compressed outline) Dairon seems more actively to seek Beren's death than he does in the poem (despite line 1068), and Tinúviel pleads against her father's policy.

For explanation of the references in A to Celegorm (notes to lines 1087, 1102–3) see p. 171. According to the earlier story seen in A the ring given to Barahir was made by Fëanor, Celegorm's father. In B the later story is present, and the badge of the entwined serpents is that of Felagund's father Finrod (Finarfin in The Silmarillion) who now first appears (other than in a later note to The Children of Húrin, see p. 80, 138). Barahir now first replaces Egnor as Beren's father in A; and by later emendation to B (lines 937, 941) Bëor appears, who at this time, as is seen from the prose texts, was Barahir's father. With exceedingly complex genealogical and chronological restructuring of the houses of the Elf-friends in later years Bëor came to be removed from Barahir by many generations.

The name Tavros given to Oromë (891, 904) has occurred long before in the Gnomish dictionary, defined as the ‘chief wood-fay, the Blue Spirit of the Woods’ (I. 267, entry Tavari). With his tree-propped halls (892) compare the description of Oromë’s dwelling in Valmar in the tale of The Coming of the Valar and the Building of Valinor, I. 75–6. At line 893 is the first mention of the golden hooves of Oromë’s horse.

V

So days drew on from the mournful day;
the curse of silence no more lay on Doriath, though Dairon’s flute and Lúthien’s singing both were mute.
The murmurs soft awake once more 1210 about the woods, the waters roar past the great gates of Thingol’s halls;
but no dancing step of Lúthien falls on turf or leaf. For she forlorn, where stumbled once, where bruised and torn, 1215 with longing on him like a dream, had Beren sat by the shrouded stream Esgalduin the dark and strong,
she sat and mourned in a low song:
‘Endless roll the waters past! 1220
To this my love hath come at last,
enchanted waters pitiless,
a heartache and a loneliness.’

The summer turns. In branches tall she hears the pattering raindrops fall, 1225

the windy tide in leafy seas,
the creaking of the countless trees;
and longs unceasing and in vain to hear one calling once again the tender name that nightingales were called of old. Echo fails.

1230

‘Tinúviel! Tinúviel!’

the memory is like a knell,
a faint and far-off tolling bell:

‘Tinúviel! Tinúviel!’

1235

‘O mother Melian, tell to me some part of what thy dark eyes see!
Tell of thy magic where his feet are wandering! What foes him meet?
O mother, tell me, lives he still treading the desert and the hill?
Do sun and moon above him shine, do the rains fall on him, mother mine?’

1240

‘Nay, Lúthien my child, I fear
he lives indeed in bondage drear.
The Lord of Wolves hath prisons dark,
chains and enchantments cruel and stark,
there trapped and bound and languishing now Beren dreams that thou dost sing.’

1245

‘Then I alone must go to him and dare the dread in dungeons dim;
for none there be that will him aid in all the world, save elven-maid whose only skill were joy and song, 1250

and both have failed and left her long.' 1255

Then nought said Melian thereto, though wild the words. She wept anew, and ran through the woods like hunted deer with her hair streaming and eyes of fear.

Dairon she found with ferny crown 1260 silently sitting on beech-leaves brown.

On the earth she cast her at his side.

'O Dairon, Dairon, my tears,' she cried,
'now pity for our old days' sake!

Make me a music for heart's ache, 1265 for heart's despair, and for heart's dread, for light gone dark and laughter dead!'

'But for music dead there is no note,'

Dairon answered, and at his throat 1270 his fingers clutched. Yet his pipe he took,
and sadly trembling the music shook;

and all things stayed while that piping went wailing in the hollows, and there intent

they listened, their business and mirth, 1275 their hearts' gladness and the light of earth forgotten; and bird-voices failed while Dairon's flute in Doriath wailed.

Lúthien wept not for very pain,
and when he ceased she spoke again:

'My friend, I have a need of friends, 1280
as he who a long dark journey wends, and fears the road, yet dare not turn and look back where the candles burn in windows he has left. The night in front, he doubts to find the light 1285 that far beyond the hills he seeks.'

And thus of Melian's words she speaks, and of her doom and her desire to climb the mountains, and the fire and ruin of the Northern realm 1290 to dare, a maiden without helm or sword, or strength of hardy limb, where magic founders and grows dim.

His aid she sought to guide her forth and find the pathways to the North, 1295
if he would not for love of her go by her side a wanderer.

'Wherefore,' said he, 'should Dairon go into direst peril earth doth know for the sake of mortal who did steal 1300 his laughter and joy? No love I feel for Beren son of Barahir, nor weep for him in dungeons drear,
who in this wood have chains enow, heavy and dark. But thee, I vow, 1305
I will defend from perils fell and deadly wandering into hell.'

No more they spake that day, and she perceived not his meaning. Sorrowfully she thanked him, and she left him there. 1310

A tree she climbed, till the bright air above the woods her dark hair blew, and straining afar her eyes could view the outline grey and faint and low of dizzy towers where the clouds go, 1315

the southern faces mounting sheer
in rocky pinnacle and pier
of Shadowy Mountains pale and cold;
and wide the lands before them rolled.
But straightway Dairon sought the king 1320 and told him his daughter's pondering, and how her madness might her lead to ruin, unless the king gave heed.
Thingol was wroth, and yet amazed;
in wonder and half fear he gazed 1325 on Dairon, and said: 'True hast thou been.
Now ever shall love be us between,
while Doriath lasts; within this realm thou art a prince of beech and elm!'
He sent for Lúthien, and said: 1330
'O maiden fair, what hath thee led to ponder madness and despair to wander to ruin, and to fare from Doriath against my will, stealing like a wild thing men would kill 1335 into the emptiness outside?'
'The wisdom, father,' she replied;
nor would she promise to forget, nor would she vow for love or threat her folly to forsake and meek 1340 in Doriath her father's will to seek.
This only vowed she, if go she must,
that none but herself would she now trust, no folk of her father's would persuade to break his will or lend her aid; 1345 if go she must, she would go alone and friendless dare the walls of stone.

In angry love and half in fear Thingol took counsel his most dear to guard and keep. He would not bind 1350 in caverns deep and intertwined sweet Lúthien, his lovely maid, who robbed of air must wane and fade, who ever must look upon the sky and see the sun and moon go by. 1355
But close unto his mounded seat and grassy throne there ran the feet of Hirilorn, the beechen queen.
Upon her triple boles were seen no break or branch, until aloft 1360 in a green glimmer, distant, soft,
the mightiest vault of leaf and bough
from world's beginning until now was flung above Esgalduin's shores and the long slopes to Thingol's doors. 1365

Grey was the rind of pillars tall and silken-smooth, and far and small to squirrels' eyes were those who went at her grey feet upon the bent.
Now Thingol made men in the beech, 1370 in that great tree, as far as reach their longest ladders, there to build an airy house; and as he willed a little dwelling of fair wood was made, and veiled in leaves it stood 1375 above the first branches. Corners three it had and windows faint to see, and by three shafts of Hirilorn in the corners standing was upborne.

There Lúthien was bidden dwell, 1380 until she was wiser and the spell of madness left her. Up she clomb the long ladders to her new home among the leaves, among the birds;
she sang no song, she spoke no words. 1385 White glimmering in the tree she rose, and her little door they heard her close.
The ladders were taken and no more her feet might tread Esgalduin's shore.

Thither at whiles they climbed and brought 1390
all things she needed or besought;
but death was his, whoso should dare a ladder leave, or creeping there should set one by the tree at night;
a guard was held from dusk to light 1395 about the grey feet of Hirilorn and Lúthien in prison and forlorn.
There Dairon grieving often stood in sorrow for the captive of the wood, and melodies made upon his flute 1400 leaning against a grey tree-root.
Lúthien would from her windows stare and see him far under piping there, and she forgave his betraying word for the music and the grief she heard, and only Dairon would she let across her threshold foot to set.

Yet long the hours when she must sit and see the sunbeams dance and flit in beechen leaves, or watch the stars 1410

peep on clear nights between the bars of beechen branches. And one night just ere the changing of the light a dream there came, from the Gods, maybe, or Melian's magic. She dreamed that she 1415 heard Beren's voice o'er hill and fell 'Tinúviel' call, 'Tinúviel.'

And her heart answered: 'Let me be gone to seek him no others think upon!' 1420 She woke and saw the moonlight pale through the slim leaves. It trembled frail upon her arms, as these she spread and there in longing bowed her head, and yearned for freedom and escape.

Now Lúthien doth her counsel shape; 1425 and Melian's daughter of deep lore knew many things, yea, magics more than then or now know elven-maids that glint and shimmer in the glades.

She pondered long, while the moon sank 1430 and faded, and the starlight shrank, and the dawn opened. At last a smile on her face flickered. She mused a while, and watched the morning sunlight grow, then called to those that walked below. 1435

And when one climbed to her she prayed that he would in the dark pools wade of cold Esgalduin, water clear, the clearest water cold and sheer to draw for her. 'At middle night,' 1440 she said, 'in bowl of silver white

it must be drawn and brought to me with no word spoken, silently.'

Another she begged to bring her wine in a jar of gold where flowers twine – 1445
 'and singing let him come to me at high noon, singing merrily.'

Again she spake: 'Now go, I pray, to Melian the queen, and say:
 "thy daughter many a weary hour 1450
 slow passing watches in her bower;
 a spinning-wheel she begs thee send.'"

Then Dairon she called: 'I prithee, friend, climb up and talk to Lúthien!'

And sitting at her window then, 1455
 she said: 'My Dairon, thou hast craft, beside thy music, many a shaft and many a tool of carven wood to fashion with cunning. It were good, if thou wouldst make a little loom 1460 to stand in the corner of my room.
 My idle fingers would spin and weave a pattern of colours, of morn and eve, of sun and moon and changing light amid the beech-leaves waving bright.' 1465

This Dairon did and asked her then:
 'O Lúthien, O Lúthien,
 What wilt thou weave? What wilt thou spin?'

'A marvellous thread, and wind therein a potent magic, and a spell 1470
 I will weave within my web that hell nor all the powers of Dread shall break.'
 Then Dairon wondered, but he spake

no word to Thingol, though his heart feared the dark purpose of her art. 1475

And Lúthien now was left alone.
A magic song to Men unknown
she sang, and singing then the wine with water mingled three times nine;
and as in golden jar they lay 1480
she sang a song of growth and day;
and as they lay in silver white another song she sang, of night and darkness without end, of height uplifted to the stars, and flight 1485 and freedom. And all names of things tallest and longest on earth she sings:
the locks of the Longbeard dwarves; the tail of Draugluin the werewolf pale;
the body of Glómund the great snake; 1490
the vast upsoaring peaks that quake above the fires in Angband's gloom;
the chain Angainor that ere Doom for Morgoth shall by Gods be wrought of steel and torment. Names she sought, 1495 and sang of Glend the sword of Nan;
of Gilim the giant of Eruman;
and last and longest named she then the endless hair of Uinen, the Lady of the Sea, that lies 1500 through all the waters under skies.

Then did she lave her head and sing
a theme of sleep and slumbering, profound and fathomless and dark as Lúthien's shadowy hair was dark – 1505 each thread was more slender and more fine than threads of twilight that entwine in filmy web the fading grass and closing flowers as day doth pass.

Now long and longer grew her hair, 1510 and fell to her feet, and wandered there like pools of shadow on the ground.

Then Lúthien in a slumber drowned was laid upon her bed and slept, till morning through the windows crept 1515 thinly and faint. And then she woke, and the room was filled as with a smoke and with an evening mist, and deep she lay thereunder drowsed in sleep.

Behold! her hair from windows blew 1520 in morning airs, and darkly grew waving about the pillars grey of Hirilorn at break of day.

Then groping she found her little shears, and cut the hair about her ears, 1525 and close she cropped it to her head, enchanted tresses, thread by thread.
Thereafter grew they slow once more,
yet darker than their wont before.

And now was her labour but begun: 1530 long was she spinning, long she spun;
and though with elvish skill she wrought, long was her weaving. If men sought to call her, crying from below,

‘Nothing I need,’ she answered, ‘go! 1535
I would keep my bed, and only sleep
I now desire, who waking weep.’

Then Dairon feared, and in amaze he called from under; but three days she answered not. Of cloudy hair 1540 she wove a web like misty air of moonless night, and thereof made a robe as fluttering-dark as shade beneath great trees, a magic dress that all was drenched with drowsiness, 1545

enchanted with a mightier spell than Melian’s raiment in that dell wherein of yore did Thingol roam
beneath the dark and starry dome
that hung above the dawning world. 1550

And now this robe she round her furled, and veiled her garments shimmering white;
her mantle blue with jewels bright like crystal stars, the lilies gold, were wrapped and hid; and down there rolled 1555

dim dreams and faint oblivious sleep falling about her, to softly creep through all the air. Then swift she takes the threads unused; of these she makes a slender rope of twisted strands 1560

yet long and stout, and with her hands she makes it fast unto the shaft of Hirilorn. Now, all her craft and labour ended, looks she forth from her little window facing North. 1565

Already the sunlight in the trees is drooping red, and dusk she sees come softly along the ground below, and now she murmurs soft and slow.
 Now chanting clearer down she cast 1570 her long hair, till it reached at last from her window to the darkling ground.
 Men far beneath her heard the sound;
 but the slumbrous strand now swung and swayed above her guards. Their talking stayed, 1575 they listened to her voice and fell suddenly beneath a binding spell.

Now clad as in a cloud she hung;
 now down her ropéd hair she swung as light as squirrel, and away, 1580 away, she danced, and who could say what paths she took, whose elvish feet no impress made a-dancing fleet?

NOTES

- 1222– At lines 651–2 these lines were 3 transposed on C. S. Lewis's suggestion (see p. 323); and heartache was emended to hunger.
 1226 Cf. line 664.
 1231 Original reading of B: are called in

- elfland. Echo fails.* The change was probably simply to get rid of 'elfland'.
- 1249 now: uncertain (original reading doth Beren dream emended to ?now Beren dreams).
- 1253 Throughout this Canto elven- and elvish are emendations of elfin made on the B-text.
- 1260– Cf. lines 497–8.
1
- 1308– Marked revise on the B-text.
10
- 1312 her dark hair: so also in A. See note to line 558.
- 1316– Cf. lines 389–90. The Shadowy Mountains (1318) are the Mountains of Terror (Ered Gorgoroth): see pp. 170–1.
17
- 1323 This line is marked with an X on the B-text.
- 1329 As line 1323.
- 1358 Against Hirilorn in A is written Hiradorn, and so also at lines 1396, 1523. At line 1563 Hiradorn is the form in the text of A.
- 1362– Cf. lines 872–3.
3
- 1370 men > them A. At 1390, where B has

- they*, A had men > they; at 1533, 1573 men was not changed in either text.
- 1414–17 Marked with a line on the B-text; in the margin some new verses are written, but so faint and rapid as to be quite illegible.
- 1488 locks B] beards A
- 1489 A: of Carcharas the wolf-ward pale; In the original draft the spelling is Carcaras as in the typescript version of the Tale of Tinúviel (manuscript version Karkaras). In the second version of The Children of Húrin (p. 107 line 374) the form is Carcharoth (emended from Carcharolch).
- 1490 Glómund B] Glórund A (as in the Lost Tales, but there always without accent).
- 1493 Angainor A, B] Engainor in the original draft.
- 1496 Nan B] Nann A (but Nan in the original draft).
- 1549–50 Cf. lines 406–7.
- 1563 Hirilorn B] Hiradorn A. See note to line 1358.

Commentary on Canto V

The plot-outline 'Synopsis I' covering the narrative of this Canto is very slight:

Mourning of Tinúviel.

Treachery of Dairon.

Building of the Tree House in Hirilorn.

Escape of Tinúviel.

[Added in: Repentance, wandering, and loss of Dairon.]

The wandering and loss of Dairon goes back to the Tale of Tinúviel (Il. 20–1) and survived into The Silmarillion (p. 183), but there is no other mention of his 'repentance' (though this is perhaps implied in the Lay, lines 1398 ff.)

In my commentary on the passage in the Tale of Tinúviel corresponding to this Canto I remarked (Il. 54) that the story of her imprisonment in the house in Hirilorn and her escape from it never underwent any significant change. The passage in The Silmarillion (p. 172) is indeed very brief, but its lack of detail is due to compression rather than to omission based on dissatisfaction; the Lay of Leithian, from which the prose account in The Silmarillion directly derives, is in this passage so close, in point of narrative detail, to the Tale of Tinúviel as to be almost identical with it.

There is little to add to this here. In one respect the narrative of the Lay is at variance with the story told in The Silmarillion. What was 'the curse of silence' (1207)? It was due to Dairon (848–53). In a preliminary, soon abandoned draft for the 'Silmarillion' version, where the story was to be told far more amply (by following the Lay more closely) the matter is made more explicit:

But Dairon haunted the trees and watched them from afar; and he cried aloud in the bitterness of his heart: 'Hateful is now become the land that I loved, and the trees misshapen. No more shall music here be heard. Let all voices fail in Doriath, and in every dale and upon every hill let the trees stand silent!’ And there was a hush and a great stillness; and Thingol’s folk were filled with wonder. And they spoke to their king, asking what was the reason of the silence.

Dairon’s ‘curse’ was lifted after Beren’s departure, although Lúthien no longer sang and Dairon no longer piped. This is in contrast to The Silmarillion (p. 168), where after Beren went Lúthien was silent, and from that hour she sang not again in Doriath. A brooding silence fell upon the woods.

For the names in the ‘lengthening spell’ see ll. 67–8. A new element among the ‘longest things’ is introduced in the version in the Lay, the peaks above Angband (1491–2); and in B the name of the great Dragon becomes Glómund. The chain with which Morgoth was bound, Angaino/Angainu in the Lost Tales, becomes Angainor; but it is curious that in the Lay it is only spoken of as a punishment awaiting Morgoth in the future (ere Doom, 1493), whereas in the old story of The Chaining of Melko (l. 104) it was the shackle with which he was taken prisoner in the original war that led to his captivity in Valinor, and this survived in The Silmarillion (p. 51): at the end of the Elder Days ‘he was bound with the chain Angainor which he had worn aforetime’ (ibid. p. 252).

New elements in the story that have yet to appear in the actual narrative of the Lay are seen in Draugluin, replacing in B Carcharas of A in the ‘lengthening spell’ (thus Carcharas is no longer the ‘father of wolves’, see ll. 68), and in Melian’s reference to Beren’s lying in the dungeons of the Lord of Wolves (1246).

Lúthien’s dream in which she heard Beren’s voice far off is still ascribed, as it was in the Tale, to the Gods, if less positively (a dream there came, from the Gods, maybe,/or Melian’s magic, 1414–15); see ll. 19, 68. But the passage is marked in B, perhaps indicating dissatisfaction with the idea.

There is curious detail in a marginal note to the B-text. At some time (as I think) long afterwards someone unknown wrote against lines 1331-6: 'Thingol is here being rather obtuse'; and against this remark my father scribbled: 'But he could not believe she loved Beren - unless some evil spell had somehow been laid on her.'

VI

When Morgoth in that day of doom had slain the Trees and filled with gloom 1585
the shining land of Valinor, there Fëanor and his sons then swore the mighty oath upon the hill of tower-crownéd Tûn, that still wrought wars and sorrow in the world. 1590
From darkling seas the fogs unfurled their blinding shadows grey and cold where Glingal once had bloomed with gold and Belthil bore its silver flowers.
The mists were mantled round the towers 1595 of the Elves' white city by the sea.
There countless torches fitfully did start and twinkle, as the Gnomes were gathered to their fading homes, and thronged the long and winding stair 1600 that led to the wide echoing square.

There Fëanor mourned his jewels divine, the Silmarils he made. Like wine his wild and potent words them fill;
a great host harkens deathly still. 1605
But all he said both wild and wise, half truth and half the fruit of lies that Morgoth sowed in Valinor, in other songs and other lore recorded is. He bade them flee 1610 from lands divine, to cross the sea, the pathless plains, the perilous shores where ice-infested water roars;

to follow Morgoth to the unlit earth leaving their dwellings and olden mirth; 1615 to go back to the Outer Lands to wars and weeping. There their hands they joined in vows, those kinsmen seven, swearing beneath the stars of Heaven,
by Varda the Holy that them wrought 1620 and bore them each with radiance fraught and set them in the deeps to flame.
Timbrenting's holy height they name, whereon are built the timeless halls of Manwë Lord of Gods. Who calls 1625 these names in witness may not break his oath, though earth and heaven shake.

Curufin, Celegorm the fair, Damrod and Díriel were there, and Cranthir dark, and Maidros tall 1630 (whom after torment should befall), and Maglor the mighty who like the sea with deep voice sings yet mournfully.
'Be he friend or foe, or seed defiled of Morgoth Bauglir, or mortal child 1635
that in after days on earth shall dwell,
no law, nor love, nor league of hell,
not might of Gods, not moveless fate shall him defend from wrath and hate of Fëanor's sons, who takes or steals 1640 or finding keeps the Silmarils, the thrice-enchanted globes of light that shine until the final night.'

The wars and wandering of the Gnomes this tale tells not. Far from their homes 1645 they fought and laboured in the North.

Fingon daring alone went forth and sought for Maidros where he hung;
in torment terrible he swung,
his wrist in band of forged steel, 1650 from a sheer precipice where reel the dizzy senses staring down from Thangorodrim's stony crown.

The song of Fingon Elves yet sing, captain of armies, Gnomish king, 1655 who fell at last in flame of swords with his white banners and his lords.

They sing how Maidros free he set,
and stayed the feud that slumbered yet between the children proud of Finn. 1660

Now joined once more they hemmed him in, even great Morgoth, and their host beleaguered Angband, till they boast no Orc nor demon ever dare their leaguer break or past them fare. 1665

Then days of solace woke on earth beneath the new-lit Sun, and mirth was heard in the Great Lands where Men, a young race, spread and wandered then.
That was the time that songs do call 1670
the Siege of Angband, when like a wall the Gnomish swords did fence the earth from Morgoth's ruin, a time of birth, of blossoming, of flowers, of growth;

but still there held the deathless oath, 1675 and still the Silmarils were deep in Angband's darkly-dolven keep.

An end there came, when fortune turned,
and flames of Morgoth's vengeance burned, and all the might which he prepared 1680 in secret in his fastness flared and poured across the Thirsty Plain;
and armies black were in his train.

The leaguer of Angband Morgoth broke; his enemies in fire and smoke 1685 were scattered, and the Orcs there slew and slew, until the blood like dew dripped from each cruel and crooked blade.

Then Barahir the bold did aid with mighty spear, with shield and men, 1690 Felagund wounded. To the fen escaping, there they bound their troth, and Felagund deeply swore an oath of friendship to his kin and seed, of love and succour in time of need. 1695

But there of Finrod's children four were Angrod slain and proud Egnor.
Felagund and Orodreth then gathered the remnant of their men, their maidens and their children fair; 1700 forsaking war they made their lair and cavernous hold far in the south.
On Narog's towering bank its mouth was opened; which they hid and veiled, and mighty doors, that unassailed 1705 till Túrin's day stood vast and grim, they built by trees o'ershadowed dim.

And with them dwelt a long time there Curufin, and Celegorm the fair; and a mighty folk grew neath their hands 1710
in Narog's secret halls and lands.

Thus Felagund in Nargothrond still reigned, a hidden king whose bond was sworn to Barahir the bold.
And now his son through forests cold 1715 wandered alone as in a dream.
Esgalduin's dark and shrouded stream he followed, till its waters frore were joined to Sirion, Sirion hoar, pale silver water wide and free 1720 rolling in splendour to the sea.

Now Beren came unto the pools, wide shallow meres where Sirion cools his gathered tide beneath the stars, ere chafed and sundered by the bars 1725 of reedy banks a mighty fen he feeds and drenches, plunging then into vast chasms underground, where many miles his way is wound.
Umboth-Muilin, Twilight Meres, 1730 those great wide waters grey as tears the Elves then named. Through driving rain from thence across the Guarded Plain the Hills of the Hunters Beren saw with bare tops bitten bleak and raw	1735

by western winds; but in the mist of streaming rains that flashed and hissed into the meres he knew there lay beneath those hills the cloven way of Narog, and the watchful halls	1740 of Felagund beside the falls of Ingwil tumbling from the wold.
An everlasting watch they hold,
the Gnomes of Nargothrond renowned,
and every hill is tower-crowned,	1745
where wardens sleepless peer and gaze guarding the plain and all the ways between Narog swift and Sirion pale;
and archers whose arrows never fail
there range the woods, and secret kill	1750
all who creep thither against their will.
Yet now he thrusts into that land bearing the gleaming ring on hand of Felagund, and oft doth cry:
‘Here comes no wandering Orc or spy,	1755
but Beren son of Barahir who once to Felagund was dear.’
So ere he reached the eastward shore of Narog, that doth foam and roar
o’er boulders black, those archers green	1760 came round him. When the ring was seen they bowed before him, though his plight was poor and beggarly. Then by night they led him northward, for no ford nor bridge was built where Narog poured	1765
before the gates of Nargothrond, and friend nor foe might pass beyond.

To northward, where that stream yet young more slender flowed, below the tongue of foam-splashed land that Gínglith pens 1770 when her brief golden torrent ends and joins the Narog, there they wade.
Now swiftest journey thence they made to Nargothrond's sheer terraces and dim gigantic palaces. 1775

They came beneath a sickle moon to doors there darkly hung and hewn with posts and lintels of ponderous stone and timbers huge. Now open thrown were gaping gates, and in they strode 1780 where Felagund on throne abode.

Fair were the words of Narog's king to Beren, and his wandering and all his feuds and bitter wars recounted soon. Behind closed doors 1785 they sat, while Beren told his tale of Doriath; and words him fail recalling Lúthien dancing fair with wild white roses in her hair, remembering her elven voice that rung 1790
while stars in twilight round her hung.
He spake of Thingol's marvellous halls by enchantment lit, where fountain falls and ever the nightingale doth sing to Melian and to her king. 1795
The quest he told that Thingol laid in scorn on him; how for love of maid more fair than ever was born to Men, of Tinúviel, of Lúthien,

he must essay the burning waste, 1800 and doubtless death and torment taste.

This Felagund in wonder heard, and heavily spake at last this word:
'It seems that Thingol doth desire thy death. The everlasting fire 1805 of those enchanted jewels all know is cursed with an oath of endless woe, and Fëanor's sons alone by right are lords and masters of their light.

He cannot hope within his hoard 1810 to keep this gem, nor is he lord of all the folk of Elfinesse.

And yet thou saist for nothing less can thy return to Doriath be purchased? Many a dreadful path 1815 in sooth there lies before thy feet - and after Morgoth, still a fleet untiring hate, as I know well, would hunt thee from heaven unto hell.

Fëanor's sons would, if they could, 1820

slay thee or ever thou reached his wood or laid in Thingol's lap that fire, or gained at least thy sweet desire.
Lo! Celegorm and Curufin

here dwell this very realm within, 1825 and even though I, Finrod's son, am king, a mighty power have won and many of their own folk lead.

Friendship to me in every need they yet have shown, but much I fear that to Beren son of Barahir mercy or love they will not show if once thy dreadful quest they know.' 1830

True words he spake. For when the king to all his people told this thing, 1835 and spake of the oath to Barahir, and how that mortal shield and spear had saved them from Morgoth and from woe
on Northern battlefields long ago,
then many were kindled in their hearts 1840 once more to battle. But up there starts amid the throng, and loudly cries for hearing, one with flaming eyes, proud Celegorm with gleaming hair and shining sword. Then all men stare 1845 upon his stern unyielding face, and a great hush falls upon that place.

'Be he friend or foe, or demon wild of Morgoth, Elf, or mortal child, or any that here on earth may dwell, 1850
no law, nor love, nor league of hell,
no might of Gods, no binding spell, shall him defend from hatred fell of Fëanor's sons, whoso take or steal or finding keep a Silmaril. 1855
These we alone do claim by right, our thrice enchanted jewels bright.'

Many wild and potent words he spoke, and as before in Tûn awoke his father's voice their hearts to fire,	1860
so now dark fear and brooding ire he cast on them, foreboding war of friend with friend; and pools of gore their minds imagined lying red in Nargothrond about the dead,	1865
did Narog's host with Beren go; or haply battle, ruin, and woe in Doriath where great Thingol reigned, if Fëanor's fatal jewel he gained.
And even such as were most true to Felagund his oath did rue, and thought with terror and despair of seeking Morgoth in his lair with force or guile. This Curufin	1870 when his brother ceased did then begin more to impress upon their minds; and such a spell he on them binds that never again till Túrin's day would Gnome of Narog in array	1875
of open battle go to war.	1880
With secrecy, ambush, spies, and lore of wizardry, with silent leaguer of wild things wary, watchful, eager, of phantom hunters, venomed darts, and unseen stealthy creeping arts,	1885 with padding hatred that its prey with feet of velvet all the day followed remorseless out of sight and slew it unawares at night -

thus they defended Nargothrond, 1890 and forgot their kin and solemn bond for dread of Morgoth that the art of Curufin set within their heart.

So would they not that angry day
King Felagund their lord obey, 1895 but sullen murmured that Finrod nor yet his son were as a god.

Then Felagund took off his crown and at his feet he cast it down, the silver helm of Nargothrond: 1900

‘Yours ye may break, but I my bond must keep, and kingdom here forsake.
If hearts here were that did not quake, or that to Finrod’s son were true, then I at least should find a few 1905 to go with me, not like a poor rejected beggar scorn endure, turned from my gates to leave my town,
my people, and my realm and crown!’

Hearing these words there swiftly stood 1910 beside him ten tried warriors good, men of his house who had ever fought wherever his banners had been brought.

One stooped and lifted up his crown, and said: ‘O king, to leave this town 1915 is now our fate, but not to lose thy rightful lordship. Thou shalt choose one to be steward in thy stead.’
Then Felagund upon the head of Orodreth set it: 'Brother mine, till I return this crown is thine.'

Then Celegorm no more would stay, and Curufin smiled and turned away.

1920

NOTES

- 1593– Original readings of B Glingol, Bansil, 4 as at line 1141.
- 1598– Couplet marked for revision, partly 9 on account of did start, partly on account of Gnomes. I do not record further instances of this sort, which occur casually throughout.
- 1619 Here is written on the B-text: ' ^ see the Qenta.' This is the 'Silmarillion' version of 1930, and presumably refers to the form of the Oath as it appears there.
- 1620 Varda the Holy is written in the margin of the B-text, which like A has Bridhil the Blessed. Bridhil occurs earlier in A (note to lines 377–81), where B has a different reading.
- 1632– Cf. lines 506–9.
3

- 1647 Finweg A, and B as typed, early emended in B to Fingon.
- 1654 As line 1647.
- 1656 Cf. The Children of Húrin, first version line 1975, second version line 19, from which the words (referring to Finweg/Fingon) fell in flame of swords are derived; in the second version occur also the king's white banners.
- 1710– A: a great people were gathered of the 11 Gnomes
in these new-built secret homes.
- 1736 Against the words by western winds is written (in such a way as to show that this was the point reached, not the starting-point) the date '29 Mar. 1928', the previous date being 27–28 March 1928 at line 1161.
- 1859 Tûn B] Côr A
- 1866 A: if Felagund should with Beren go;
- 1891 A: and forgot their blood and kinship's bond
- 1900 helm is an emendation in B for crown.
- 1920 An X is written against this line, probably long after when Orodreth was moved from his place as Felagund's brother (see p. 91).

1921 crown B] realm A

Commentary on Canto VI

The plot-outline 'Synopsis I' continues thus:

Beren goes to Celegorm, who disguises him [struck out: and gives him a magic knife. Beren and his Gnomish guides* are captured by Orcs: and a few survivors taken before (Melko >) Morgoth. Beren tells M. he is a 'trapper of the woods'.]

They go and seek to break into Angband disguised as Orcs, but are captured [struck out: and set in chains, and killed one by one. Beren lies wondering which will be his turn.] by the Lord of Wolves, and set in bonds, and devoured one by one.

It is interesting here to see how the relevant features of the story are treated in the 'Sketch of the Mythology' of 1926, as originally written. In this account Beren's father is Barahir, and he 'had been a friend of Celegorm of Nargothrond'. After Thingol's demand that Beren get him a Silmaril:

Beren sets out to achieve this, is captured, and set in dungeon in Angband, but conceals his real identity, and is given as a slave to Thû the hunter.

This passage is evidently earlier than 'Synopsis I' (at the earliest, the end of May 1926, the date of the latest of the three invoices on which it is written), since the 'Sketch' contains no reference to Celegorm's aid, Beren's companions, their disguising as Orcs, and their capture by the Lord of Wolves. On the contrary, Beren goes to Angband alone just as he did in the Tale of Tinúviel, and – most notably – is given to ‘Thû the hunter’ as a slave, just as in the Tale he was given to Tevildo Prince of Cats as a slave. In Synopsis I we see, I think, the very point at which the story of Beren’s Gnomish companions came into being, of their disguise as Orcs, and of their deaths one by one in the dungeons of the Lord of Wolves. (Thû appears first in the fragment of the Lay of the Fall of Gondolin (p. 146), and in The Children of Húrin as Morgoth’s most mightythane: first version line 391, second version line 763).

But already at lines 296 ff. in the A-text of the Lay of Leithian (summer 1925) there is a reference to the ‘deed of service’ done by Egnor Beren’s father to Celegorm, and the gift of the ring: while in the ‘Sketch’ Barahir ‘had been a friend of Celegorm of Nargothrond’. Thus:

Lay of Leithian Canto II (summer 1925)	Egnor Beren’s father performed a service for Celegorm, from whom he received a ring.
--	--

Sketch of the Mythology (early in 1926, see p.3)	Barahir Beren’s father was a friend of Celegorm of Nargothrond. Beren sets out alone and is captured and imprisoned in Angband, but is given as a slave to Thû the hunter.
--	---

Synopsis I (after May 1926)	Beren goes to Celegorm who aids him (story of the Gnomish companions appears).
--	--

The rather surprising conclusion must be that the association of Egnor/Barahir with Celegorm and the gift of the ring preceded the emergence of the story of Beren’s going to Celegorm for aid.

In the rejected part of Synopsis I here we see a last survival from the Tale of Tinúviel: Beren tells Morgoth that he is a trapper of the woods; cf. the Tale (ll. 15): ‘Beren said therewith that he was a great trapper of small animals and a snarer of birds’ – and it was indeed this explanation of Beren’s to Melko that got him his post in Tevildo’s kitchens. The mention in this rejected passage of a magic knife given to Beren by Celegorm was clearly a passing idea to account for the knife with which Beren would cut the Silmaril from the Iron Crown, since the kitchen-knife with which he did the deed in the Tale (ll. 33) had been abandoned with the kitchens.

Other loose papers in addition to Synopsis I show the further development of the narrative. The first of these I will refer to as ‘Synopsis II’; it begins with the beginning of Canto VI and I cite it here as far as the end of the Canto.

Beren comes to Felagund at Nargothrond; who receives him well, but warns him of the oath of the sons of Fëanor, and that Curufin and Celegorm dwelling with him have great power in his realm.

Curufin and Celegorm learn of Beren’s purpose, and recalling their oath forbid the Gnomes to aid Beren to get the Silmaril for Thingol. The Gnomes fearing war in Nargothrond, or war against Thingol, and in [any] case despairing utterly of reaching the depths of Angband by force or guile will not support Felagund. Felagund mindful of his own oath hands his kingdom over to Orodreth, and with only his own faithful followers of his household (ten in number) goes forth with Beren.

In the Lay of Leithian the ‘Nargothrond Element’ in the story had by this time (the spring of 1928) evolved further (see p. 171). The major figure of (Felagoth >) Felagund, son of Finwë’s third son Finrod, had emerged (see p. 91), and by Canto VI was present also in the A-text; it was he, not Celegorm, who was rescued in the battle that ended the Siege of Angband and who then went south with his brother Orodreth to found Nargothrond, and Celegorm with his brother Curufin have been shifted by the movement of the legend into the rôle of Felagund's overpowerful 'guests' (it is not made explicit in the Lay why they were there, though it could be guessed that they also had fled from 'the Northern battlefields'). In the passage from Synopsis II just given my father is seen working out the narrative from this point and on this narrative basis, and many of the motives that are important in the final version now appear: on account of their oath Celegorm and Curufin are the cause of the refusal of the Elves of Nargothrond to support Felagund in the aiding of Beren; Felagund gives the crown to Orodreth; and only ten of Felagund's people go with him.* I think it certain that Synopsis II was written as, and did in fact provide, the outline narrative for this and the following Cantos.

In Canto VI we meet for the first time several central features of the earlier history of the Gnomes in Beleriand and the North, though these are not necessarily their first occurrences in my father's writings. Thus the story of the rescue of Maidros by (Finweg >) Fingon from his torment on Thangorodrim, where he was hanged by his right hand, is almost certainly implied in The Children of Húrin, where it is said that Maidros wielded his sword with his left (see p. 86); and it is fully told in the 'Sketch' as first written early in 1926, some two years before the date of the present Canto (see note to line 1736). Here also are references to the long years of the Siege of Angband after the healing of the feud among the Gnomish princes (the cause of which we do not yet know); and to the bursting of Morgoth's armies black (cf. The Silmarillion p. 151: 'the black armies of the Orcs') across the Thirsty Plain (for which see p. 55). Here we meet for the first time (apart from a later note to The Children of Húrin, p. 80) Angrod and Egnor, sons of Finrod and brothers of Felagund and Orodreth, who meet their deaths in the battle; and here it is said that Felagund was wounded (line 1691), and that his rescuers withdrew ‘to the fen’ – very probably the ‘mighty fen’ of Sirion referred to at line 1726.

For Finweg > Fingon, and Finn (line 1660) = Finwë, see p. 137-8. The genealogy of the princes of the Gnomes as it had emerged in the 1920s is now complete:

The earliest version of the Fëanorian Oath is found in alliterative verse in The Flight of the Noldoli (see pp. 135-6), and that in the Lay of Leithian (lines 1634-43) follows it quite closely despite its being in rhyming couplets, with many of the same phrases. Further variations are introduced in Celegorm’s version (lines 1848-57). On the name Timbrenting of Taniquetil (taken in witness of the Oath) see p. 127, 139.

Most of the geographical references and names in this Canto are amply explained by Part III ‘Failivrin’ of The Children of Húrin. For the Hills of the Hunters, the rivers Ginglith and Ingwil, and the Guarded Plain see p. 88-9. It is now made clear that Umboth-Muilin, the Twilight Meres, were north of Sirion’s fall and passage underground (to which there is a reference in The Children of Húrin, line 1467), whereas in the Lost Tales the reverse was the case (see II. 217); and also that Esgalduin was a tributary of Sirion (lines 1717-20). In the verses describing Nargothrond the Lay of Leithian looks back to and echoes The Children of Húrin; compare

Doors there darkly dim gigantic
were hewn in the hillside; huge their timbers

In this latter passage there are again strong echoes of The Children of Húrin; compare a leaguer silent

unseen, stealthy, beset the stranger,
as of wild things wary that watch moveless,
then follow fleetly with feet of velvet
their heedless prey with padding hatred
(p. 66, 1749-53)

with

with silent leaguer
of wild things wary, watchful, eager,
of phantom hunters, venomous darts,
and unseen stealthy creeping arts, with padding hatred that its prey with feet of velvet all the day followed remorseless...
(1882-8)

There remain a couple of points concerning names. The Great Lands are still so called (1668); but at 1616 the expression 'Outer Lands' occurs. This was used in The Cottage of Lost Play as first written in the sense of the Great Lands, but was subsequently applied to the lands beyond the Western Sea (see l. 21, 81-2). 'Outer Lands' = Middle-earth is frequent in The Silmarillion.

The name of the river, Narog, is used, as often later, to refer to the realm of Nargothrond: the King of Nargothrond is the King of Narog (see lines 1782, 1866).

VII

Thus twelve alone there ventured forth from Nargothrond, and to the North they turned their silent secret way, and vanished in the fading day.

1925

No trumpet sounds, no voice there sings, as robed in mail of cunning rings now blackened dark with helmets grey and sombre cloaks they steal away.

1930

Far-journeying Narog's leaping course they followed till they found his source, the flickering falls, whose freshets sheer
a glimmering goblet glassy-clear with crystal waters fill that shake and quiver down from Ivrin's lake, from Ivrin's mere that mirrors dim
the pallid faces bare and grim
of Shadowy Mountains neath the moon.

1935

1940

Now far beyond the realm immune from Orc and demon and the dread of Morgoth's might their ways had led.
In woods o'ershadowed by the heights they watched and waited many nights, till on a time when hurrying cloud did moon and constellation shroud, and winds of autumn's wild beginning soughed in the boughs, and leaves went spinning down the dark eddies rustling soft, they heard a murmur hoarsely waft from far, a croaking laughter coming;
now louder; now they heard the drumming of hideous stamping feet that tramp

1945

1950

the weary earth. Then many a lamp 1955 of sullen red they saw draw near, swinging, and glistening on spear and scimitar. There hidden nigh they saw a band of Orcs go by with goblin-faces swart and foul. 1960 Bats were about them, and the owl, the ghostly forsaken night-bird cried from trees above. The voices died, the laughter like clash of stone and steel passed and faded. At their heel 1965 the Elves and Beren crept more soft than foxes stealing through a croft in search of prey. Thus to the camp lit by flickering fire and lamp they stole, and counted sitting there 1970 full thirty Orcs in the red flare of burning wood. Without a sound they one by one stood silent round, each in the shadow of a tree;
each slowly, grimly, secretly 1975 bent then his bow and drew the string.

Hark! how they sudden twang and sing,
when Felagund lets forth a cry;
and twelve Orcs sudden fall and die.
Then forth they leap casting their bows. 1980
Out their bright swords, and swift their blows!
The stricken Orcs now shriek and yell as lost things deep in lightless hell.
Battle there is beneath the trees bitter and swift; but no Orc flees; 1985

there left their lives that wandering band and stained no more the sorrowing land with rape and murder. Yet no song of joy, or triumph over wrong, the Elves there sang. In peril sore 1990 they were, for never alone to war so small an Orc-band went, they knew.
Swiftly the raiment off they drew and cast the corpses in a pit.
This desperate counsel had the wit 1995 of Felagund for them devised:
as Orcs his comrades he disguised.

The poisoned spears, the bows of horn, the crooked swords their foes had borne they took; and loathing each him clad 2000 in Angband's raiment foul and sad.
They smeared their hands and faces fair with pigment dark; the matted hair all lank and black from goblin head they shore, and joined it thread by thread 2005 with Gnomish skill. As each one leers at each dismayed, about his ears he hangs it noisome, shuddering.

Then Felagund a spell did sing of changing and of shifting shape; 2010
their ears grew hideous, and agape their mouths did start, and like a fang each tooth became, as slow he sang.
Their Gnomish raiment then they hid, and one by one behind him slid, 2015 behind a foul and goblin thing that once was elven-fair and king.

Northward they went; and Orcs they met who passed, nor did their going let,
but hailed them in greeting; and more bold 2020
they grew as past the long miles rolled.

At length they came with weary feet beyond Beleriand. They found the fleet young waters, rippling, silver-pale 2025 of Sirion hurrying through that vale where Taur-na-Fuin, Deadly Night, the trackless forest's pine-clad height, falls dark forbidding slowly down upon the east, while westward frown the northward-bending Mountains grey 2030 and bar the westering light of day.

An isléd hill there stood alone amid the valley, like a stone rolled from the distant mountains vast when giants in tumult hurtled past. 2035 Around its feet the river looped a stream divided, that had scooped the hanging edges into caves.
There briefly shuddered Sirion's waves and ran to other shores more clean. 2040

An elven watchtower had it been,
and strong it was, and still was fair;
but now did grim with menace stare
one way to pale Beleriand, the other to that mournful land 2045 beyond the valley's northern mouth.

Thence could be glimpsed the fields of drouth,
the dusty dunes, the desert wide;
and further far could be descried the brooding cloud that hangs and lowers 2050 on Thangorodrim's thunderous towers.

Now in that hill was the abode of one most evil; and the road that from Beleriand thither came he watched with sleepless eyes of flame. 2055 (From the North there led no other way, save east where the Gorge of Aglon lay,
and that dark path of hurrying dread which only in need the Orcs would tread through Deadly Nightshade's awful gloom 2060 where Taur-na-Fuin's branches loom;
and Aglon led to Doriath, and Fëanor's sons watched o'er that path.)

Men called him Thû, and as a god
in after days beneath his rod 2065
bewildered bowed to him, and made his ghastly temples in the shade.
Not yet by Men enthralled adored,
now was he Morgoth's mightiest lord, Master of Wolves, whose shivering howl 2070 for ever echoed in the hills, and foul enchantments and dark sigaldry did weave and wield. In glamoury that necromancer held his hosts of phantoms and of wandering ghosts, 2075 of misbegotten or spell-wronged monsters that about him thronged, working his bidding dark and vile:

the werewolves of the Wizard's Isle.

From Thû their coming was not hid; 2080 and though beneath the eaves they slid of the forest's gloomy-hanging boughs, he saw them afar, and wolves did rouse:
'Go! fetch me those sneaking Orcs,' he said,
'that fare thus strangely, as if in dread, 2085 and do not come, as all Orcs use and are commanded, to bring me news of all their deeds, to me, to Thû.'

From his tower he gazed, and in him grew suspicion and a brooding thought, 2090 waiting, leering, till they were brought.
Now ringed about with wolves they stand, and fear their doom. Alas! the land,
the land of Narog left behind!
Foreboding evil weights their mind, 2095
as downcast, halting, they must go and cross the stony bridge of woe to Wizard's Isle, and to the throne there fashioned of blood-darkened stone.

'Where have ye been? What have ye seen?' 2100

'In Elfinesse; and tears and distress, the fire blowing and the blood flowing,
these have we seen, there have we been.
Thirty we slew and their bodies threw in a dark pit. The ravens sit and the owl cries where our swath lies.' 2105

'Come, tell me true, O Morgoth's thralls, what then in Elfinesse befalls?
What of Nargothrond? Who reigneth there?
Into that realm did your feet dare?' 2110

'Only its borders did we dare.
There reigns King Felagund the fair.'

'Then heard ye not that he is gone, that Celegorm sits his throne upon?'

'That is not true! If he is gone, then Orodreth sits his throne upon.' 2115

'Sharp are your ears, swift have they got tidings of realms ye entered not!
What are your names, O spearmen bold?
Who your captain, ye have not told.' 2120

'Nereb and Dungalef and warriors ten,
so we are called, and dark our den under the mountains. Over the waste we march on an errand of need and haste.
Boldog the captain awaits us there where fires from under smoke and flare.' 2125

'Boldog, I heard, was lately slain warring on the borders of that domain where Robber Thingol and outlaw folk cringe and crawl beneath elm and oak 2130 in drear Doriath. Heard ye not then of that pretty fay, of Lúthien?

Her body is fair, very white and fair.
Morgoth would possess her in his lair.
Boldog he sent, but Boldog was slain: 2135 strange ye were not in Boldog's train.

Nereb looks fierce, his frown is grim.
Little Lúthien! What troubles him?
Why laughs he not to think of his lord crushing a maiden in his hoard, 2140 that foul should be what once was clean, that dark should be where light has been?

Whom do ye serve, Light or Mirk?
Who is the maker of mightiest work?
Who is the king of earthly kings, 2145
the greatest giver of gold and rings?
Who is the master of the wide earth?
Who despoiled them of their mirth, the greedy Gods? Repeat your vows, Orcs of Bauglir! Do not bend your brows! 2150
Death to light, to law, to love!
Cursed be moon and stars above!
May darkness everlasting old that waits outside in surges cold drown Manwë, Varda, and the sun! 2155
May all in hatred be begun, and all in evil ended be,
in the moaning of the endless Sea!'

But no true Man nor Elf yet free would ever speak that blasphemy, 2160

and Beren muttered: 'Who is Thû to hinder work that is to do?
Him we serve not, nor to him owe obeisance, and we now would go.'

Thû laughed: 'Patience! Not very long shall ye abide. But first a song
I will sing to you, to ears intent.'

Then his flaming eyes he on them bent, and darkness black fell round them all.
Only they saw as through a pall of eddying smoke those eyes profound in which their senses choked and drowned.

He chanted a song of wizardry, of piercing, opening, of treachery, revealing, uncovering, betraying.

Then sudden Felagund there swaying sang in answer a song of staying, resisting, battling against power,
of secrets kept, strength like a tower,
and trust unbroken, freedom, escape;
of changing and of shifting shape,
of snares eluded, broken traps,
the prison opening, the chain that snaps.

Backwards and forwards swayed their song.
Reeling and foundering, as ever more strong Thû's chanting swelled, Felagund fought, and all the magic and might he brought
of Elfinesse into his words.

Softly in the gloom they heard the birds singing afar in Nargothrond,

the sighing of the sea beyond,
beyond the western world, on sand,
on sand of pearls in Elvenland.

Then the gloom gathered: darkness growing in Valinor, the red blood flowing 2195
beside the sea, where the Gnomes slew the Foamriders, and stealing drew their white ships with their white sails from lamplit havens. The wind wails.
The wolf howls. The ravens flee. 2200
The ice mutters in the mouths of the sea.
The captives sad in Angband mourn.
Thunder rumbles, the fires burn, a vast smoke gushes out, a roar – and Felagund swoons upon the floor. 2205

Behold! they are in their own fair shape, fairskinned, brighteyed. No longer gape Orclike their mouths; and now they stand betrayed into the wizard's hand.
Thus came they unhappy into woe, 2210 to dungeons no hope nor glimmer know, where chained in chains that eat the flesh and woven in webs of strangling mesh they lay forgotten, in despair.

Yet not all unavailing were 2215 the spells of Felagund; for Thû neither their names nor purpose knew.
These much he pondered and bethought,
and in their woeful chains them sought,

and threatened all with dreadful death, 2220
if one would not with traitor's breath reveal this knowledge. Wolves should come and slow devour them one by one before the others' eyes, and last should one alone be left aghast, 2225 then in a place of horror hung with anguish should his limbs be wrung, in the bowels of the earth be slow endlessly, cruelly, put to woe and torment, till he all declared. 2230

Even as he threatened, so it fared.
From time to time in the eyeless dark two eyes would grow, and they would hark to frightful cries, and then a sound of rending, a slavering on the ground, 2235
and blood flowing they would smell.
But none would yield, and none would tell.

NOTES

- 1943 Against the end of this line is written the date 'March 30 1928'. The previous date was 29 March 1928 at line 1736.
- 2023 (and subsequently) Broseliand A, and B as typed.

- 2026 Deadly Night] Tangled Night A, and B as typed. Cf. Deadly Nightshade as a name of Taur-na-Fuin in The Children of Húrin (p. 55) and at line 2060 in the present Canto.
- 2047 fields of drouth: the expression Plains of Drouth occurs in The Children of Húrin, p. 36, line 826.
- 2056–63 These lines are marked with an X and a sign for deletion in the B-text, probably not on account of anything in their content but because my father felt them to be intrusive.
- 2064–6 Emended in B to:
- Gnomes called him Gorthû, as a god
in after days beneath his rod bewildered they bowed to him, and made (Sauron was first substituted for Thû. Men is written beside they in line 2066.) Thû > Gorthû at all subsequent occurrences in this Canto, or the name avoided by substitution of pronoun or article; thus 2088 of all their deeds to me, Gorthû; 2161–2 Doth Gorthû/now hinder work; 2165 He laughed; 2186 the chanting; etc.
- This change is difficult to date, but was made when Gnomes was still employed (2064). In Canto VIII Thû was left unchanged, and subsequently, until 3290, which was emended to where Gorthû reigned; at the end of the poem (3947, 3951) Thû was changed to Sauron.
- 2100– On the changed metre of these lines

- 6 see the Commentary.
- 2114 After this line is written the date
 'March 31st' (i.e. 1928). The previous date was 30 March 1928 at line 1943.
- 2121 Nereb and Dungalef: emended in B to Wrath and Hate, at the same time as Thû > Gorthû.
- 2137 Nereb looks fierce: emended in B to Fierce is your chief.
- 2155 Bridhil A, and B as typed; the change to Varda made at the same time as Thû to Gorthû. Cf. note to line 1620.
- 2175– The three rhyming lines go back 7 through A to the original draft.
- 2193 Elvenland is an emendation to B Fairyland.

Commentary on Canto VII

The plot-outline 'Synopsis I' for the narrative in this Canto has already been given (pp. 219-20). 'Synopsis II' continues from the point reached on p. 221.

They ambush an Orc-band, and disguising themselves in the raiment and fashion of the slain, march on Northward. Between the Shadowy Mountains and the Forest of Night, where the young Sirion flows in the narrowing valley, they come upon the werewolves, and the host of Thû Lord of Wolves. They are taken before Thû, and after a contest of riddling questions and answers are revealed as spies, but Beren is taken as a Gnome, and that Felagund is King of Nargothrond remains hidden.

They are placed in a deep dungeon. Thû desires to discover their purpose and real names and vows death, one by one, and torment to the last one, if they will not reveal them. From time to time a great werewolf [struck through: Thû in disguise] comes and devours one of the companions.

This is obviously the narrative basis for Canto VII, and the story here reaches its final form. There may seem to be a difference between the outline and the Lay, in that the former says that 'after a contest of riddling questions and answers they are revealed as spies', whereas in the latter Felagund is overcome by song of greater power. In fact, the riddling contest is present, but seems not to have been fully developed. In the original draft my father scribbled the following note before he wrote the passage lines 2100 ff.:

Riddling questions. Where have you been, who have you slain? Thirty men. Who reigns in Nargothrond? Who is captain of Orcs? Who wrought the world? Who is king &c. They show Elfin [?bias] and too little knowledge of Angband, too much of Elfland. Thû and Felagund. enchantments against one another and Thû's slowly win, till they stand revealed as Elves.

Lines 2100-6 are in a changed metre, especially suitable to a riddle contest, and their content (the reply to Thû's question 'Where have ye been? What have ye seen?') is riddling ('misleading accuracy'). But after this the verse returns to the common metre, and the riddling element disappears (except in dark our den /under the mountains). The name Dungalef (2121), though it sounds Orcish enough, was an oddly transparent device, since Felagund had just been mentioned; but it succeeded (2217). No doubt Thû's ponderings on the matter were too subtle.

This is the first full portrait of Thû, who emerges as a being of great power, far advanced in sorcery, and is indeed here called 'necromancer' (2074). Here also is the first suggestion that his history would extend far beyond the tale of Beren and Lúthien, when 'in after days' Men would worship him, and build 'his ghastly temples in the shade'.

It is in this Canto, also, that the island in the river Sirion (not actually mentioned in Synopsis II) makes its first appearance, together with a mention of the origin of the fortress:

An elven watchtower had it been,
and strong it was, and still was fair.
(2041-2)

My father's drawing (Pictures by J. R. R. Tolkien, no. 36) was made at Lyme Regis in Dorset in July 1928, less than four months after these lines were written; and in the drawing the caves scooped by the waters in the edges of the island (lines 2037-8) can be seen.

The Shadowy Mountains referred to in Synopsis II and in the poem are no longer the Mountains of Terror (Ered Gorgoroth), as they were at lines 386, 1318 (see pp. 170-1). In Synopsis II it is said that the young Sirion flows in the narrowing valley between the Shadowy Mountains and the Forest of Night (Taur-na-Fuin), and in the poem Ivrin's lake mirrors

the pallid faces bare and grim
of Shadowy Mountains neath the moon (1939-40)

as in The Children of Húrin (p. 62, lines 1581-2). Thus the term now reverts to its meaning in the alliterative poem, a meaning that it would henceforward retain. It is also to be noted that this mountain-range is 'northward-bending' (2030).

The lines concerning Ivrin in The Children of Húrin (1594-7):

newborn Narog, nineteen fathoms
o'er a flickering force falls in wonder,
and a glimmering goblet with glass-lucent fountains fills he by his freshets carven are echoed in The Lay of Leithian (1934-6):

the flickering falls, whose freshets sheer
a glimmering goblet glassy-clear with crystal waters fill ...

A new feature of the northern lands appears in this Canto: the Gorge of Aglon (2057), already placed (as other evidence shows) at the eastern end of Taur-na-Fuin; and line 2063 gives the first indication that this region was the territory of the Fëanorians.

The raid of the Orc-captain Boldog into Doriath, seeking to capture Lúthien for Morgoth, was an important element in the history of this time, though later it disappeared and there is no trace of it in The Silmarillion. Discussion of it is postponed till later in the Lay of Leithian, but it may be noticed here that an early reference to it is found in The Children of Húrin (p. 16 lines 392-4, p. 117 lines 764-6). There it was Thû himself who was bidden by Morgoth go ravage the realm of the robber Thingol.

The term Foamriders, used of the Third Kindred of the Elves in line 2197, is found earlier in the alliterative Flight of the Noldoli (see p. 140).

VIII

Hounds there were in Valinor with silver collars. Hart and boar, the fox and hare and nimble roe 2240 there in the forests green did go.
Oromë was the lord divine of all those woods. The potent wine went in his halls and hunting song.
The Gnomes anew have named him long 2245 Tavros, the God whose horns did blow over the mountains long ago;
who alone of Gods had loved the world
before the banners were unfurled of Moon and Sun; and shod with gold 2250 were his great horses. Hounds untold baying in woods beyond the West of race immortal he possessed:
grey and limber, black and strong,
white with silken coats and long, 2255
brown and brindled, swift and true as arrow from a bow of yew;
their voices like the deeptoned bells
that ring in Valmar's citadels, their eyes like living jewels, their teeth 2260 like ruel-bone. As sword from sheath they flashed and fled from leash to scent for Tavros' joy and merriment.

In Tavros' friths and pastures green had Huan once a young whelp been.	2265

He grew the swiftest of the swift, and Oromë gave him as a gift to Celegorm, who loved to follow the great God's horn o'er hill and hollow.
Alone of hounds of the Land of Light,	2270 when sons of Fëanor took to flight and came into the North, he stayed beside his master. Every raid and every foray wild he shared,
and into mortal battle dared.	2275
Often he saved his Gnomish lord from Orc and wolf and leaping sword.
A wolf-hound, tireless, grey and fierce he grew; his gleaming eyes would pierce
all shadows and all mist, the scent	2280
moons old he found through fen and bent, through rustling leaves and dusty sand;
all paths of wide Beleriand he knew. But wolves, he loved them best;
he loved to find their throats and wrest	2285 their snarling lives and evil breath.
The packs of Thû him feared as Death.
No wizardry, nor spell, nor dart,
no fang, nor venom devil's art could brew had harmed him; for his weird	2290 was woven. Yet he little feared that fate decreed and known to all:
before the mightiest he should fall, before the mightiest wolf alone that ever was whelped in cave of stone.	2295

Hark! afar in Nargothrond, far over Sirion and beyond,
there are dim cries and horns blowing, and barking hounds through the trees going.

The hunt is up, the woods are stirred. 2300

Who rides to-day? Ye have not heard that Celegorm and Curufin have loosed their dogs? With merry din they mounted ere the sun arose, and took their spears and took their bows. 2305

The wolves of Thû of late have dared both far and wide. Their eyes have glared by night across the roaring stream of Narog. Doth their master dream, perchance, of plots and counsels deep, 2310 of secrets that the Elf-lords keep,
of movements in the Gnomish realm and errands under beech and elm?

Curufin spake: 'Good brother mine,
I like it not. What dark design 2315 doth this portend? These evil things, we swift must end their wanderings!

And more, 'twould please my heart full well to hunt a while and wolves to fell.'

And then he leaned and whispered low 2320 that Orodreth was a dullard slow;
long time it was since the king had gone,
and rumour or tidings came there none.

'At least thy profit it would be to know whether dead he is or free; 2325 to gather thy men and thy array.

“I go to hunt” then thou wilt say, and men will think that Narog’s good ever thou heedest. But in the wood things may be learned; and if by grace, 2330 by some blind fortune he retrace his footsteps mad, and if he bear a Silmaril – I need declare no more in words; but one by right is thine (and ours), the jewel of light; 2335 another may be won – a throne.
The eldest blood our house doth own.’

Celegorm listened. Nought he said, but forth a mighty host he led;
and Huan leaped at the glad sounds, 2340
the chief and captain of his hounds.

Three days they ride by holt and hill
the wolves of Thû to hunt and kill, and many a head and fell of grey they take, and many drive away, 2345 till nigh to the borders in the West of Doriath a while they rest.

There were dim cries and horns blowing, and barking dogs through the woods going.
The hunt was up. The woods were stirred, 2350 and one there fled like startled bird, and fear was in her dancing feet.
She knew not who the woods did beat.
Far from her home, forwandered, pale,
she flitted ghostlike through the vale; 2355 ever her heart bade her up and on,

but her limbs were worn, her eyes were wan.

The eyes of Huan saw a shade wavering, darting down a glade like a mist of evening snared by day 2360 and hasting fearfully away.

He bayed, and sprang with sinewy limb to chase the shy thing strange and dim.
On terror's wings, like a butterfly pursued by a sweeping bird on high, 2365 she fluttered hither, darted there, now poised, now flying through the air – in vain. At last against a tree she leaned and panted. Up leaped he.

No word of magic gasped with woe, 2370 no elvish mystery she did know or had entwined in raiment dark availed against that hunter stark, whose old immortal race and kind no spells could ever turn or bind. 2375

Huan alone that she ever met she never in enchantment set nor bound with spells. But loveliness and gentle voice and pale distress and eyes like starlight dimmed with tears 2380 tamed him that death nor monster fears.

Lightly he lifted her, light he bore his trembling burden. Never before had Celegorm beheld such prey:
'What hast thou brought, good Huan say! 2385
Dark-elvish maid, or wraith, or fay?
Not such to hunt we came today.'

“Tis Lúthien of Doriath, the maiden spake. ‘A wandering path far from the Wood-Elves’ sunny glades 2390 she sadly winds, where courage fades and hope grows faint.’ And as she spoke down she let slip her shadowy cloak, and there she stood in silver and white.
Her starry jewels twinkled bright 2395
in the risen sun like morning dew;
the lilies gold on mantle blue gleamed and glistened. Who could gaze on that fair face without amaze?
Long did Curufin look and stare. 2400
The perfume of her flower-twined hair, her lissom limbs, her elvish face, smote to his heart, and in that place enchained he stood. ‘O maiden royal, O lady fair, wherefore in toil 2405 and lonely journey dost thou go?
What tidings dread of war and woe
In Doriath have betid? Come tell!
For fortune thee hath guided well;
friends thou hast found,’ said Celegorm, 2410 and gazed upon her elvish form.

In his heart him thought her tale unsaid he knew in part, but nought she read of guile upon his smiling face.

‘Who are ye then, the lordly chase 2415 that follow in this perilous wood?’ she asked; and answer seeming-good they gave. ‘Thy servants, lady sweet, lords of Nargothrond thee greet,

and beg that thou wouldst with them go 2420 back to their hills, forgetting woe
a season, seeking hope and rest.
And now to hear thy tale were best.'

So Lúthien tells of Beren's deeds in northern lands, how fate him leads 2425 to Doriath, of Thingol's ire, the dreadful errand that her sire decreed for Beren. Sign nor word the brothers gave that aught they heard that touched them near. Of her escape 2430 and the marvellous mantle she did shape she lightly tells, but words her fail recalling sunlight in the vale, moonlight, starlight in Doriath, ere Beren took the perilous path. 2435

'Need, too, my lords, there is of haste!
No time in ease and rest to waste.
For days are gone now since the queen, Melian whose heart hath vision keen, looking afar me said in fear 2440 that Beren lived in bondage drear.
The Lord of Wolves hath prisons dark,
chains and enchantments cruel and stark,
and there entrapped and languishing doth Beren lie – if direr thing 2445
hath not brought death or wish for death':
then gasping woe bereft her breath.

To Celegorm said Curufin

apart and low: 'Now news we win of Felagund, and now we know 2450 wherefore Thû's creatures prowling go', and other whispered counsels spake, and showed him what answer he should make.

'Lady,' said Celegorm, 'thou seest we go a-hunting roaming beast, 2455 and though our host is great and bold,
'tis ill prepared the wizards hold and island fortress to assault.
Deem not our hearts or wills at fault.
Lo! here our chase we now forsake 2460 and home our swiftest road we take, counsel and aid there to devise for Beren that in anguish lies.'

To Nargothrond they with them bore Lúthien, whose heart misgave her sore. 2465 Delay she feared; each moment pressed upon her spirit, yet she guessed they rode not as swiftly as they might.
Ahead leaped Huan day and night, and ever looking back his thought 2470 was troubled. What his master sought, and why he rode not like the fire, why Curufin looked with hot desire on Lúthien, he pondered deep, and felt some evil shadow creep 2475
of ancient curse o'er Elfinesse.
His heart was torn for the distress of Beren bold, and Lúthien dear, and Felagund who knew no fear.

In Nargothrond the torches flared 2480
and feast and music were prepared.
Lúthien feasted not but wept.
Her ways were trammelled; closely kept she might not fly. Her magic cloak was hidden, and no prayer she spoke 2485 was heeded, nor did answer find her eager questions. Out of mind, it seemed, were those afar that pined in anguish and in dungeons blind in prison and in misery. 2490 Too late she knew their treachery.
It was not hid in Nargothrond that Fëanor's sons her held in bond, who Beren heeded not, and who had little cause to wrest from Thû 2495
the king they loved not and whose quest old vows of hatred in their breast had roused from sleep. Orodreth knew the purpose dark they would pursue:
King Felagund to leave to die, 2500 and with King Thingol's blood ally the house of Fëanor by force or treaty. But to stay their course he had no power, for all his folk the brothers had yet beneath their yoke, 2505 and all yet listened to their word.
Orodreth's counsel no man heard;
their shame they crushed, and would not heed
the tale of Felagund's dire need.

At Lúthien's feet there day by day 2510 and at night beside her couch would stay Huan the hound of Nargothrond;

and words she spoke to him soft and fond:
'O Huan, Huan, swiftest hound that ever ran on mortal ground, 2515 what evil doth thy lords possess to heed no tears nor my distress?
Once Barahir all men above good hounds did cherish and did love; once Beren in the friendless North, 2520 when outlaw wild he wandered forth, had friends unfailing among things
with fur and fell and feathered wings,
and among the spirits that in stone
in mountains old and wastes alone 2525
still dwell. But now nor Elf nor Man, none save the child of Melian, remembers him who Morgoth fought and never to thraldom base was brought.'

Nought said Huan; but Curufin 2530 thereafter never near might win to Lúthien, nor touch that maid, but shrank from Huan's fangs afraid.

Then on a night when autumn damp was swathed about the glimmering lamp 2535 of the wan moon, and fitful stars were flying seen between the bars of racing cloud, when winter's horn already wound in trees forlorn, lo! Huan was gone. Then Lúthien lay 2540 fearing new wrong, till just ere day, when all is dead and breathless still and shapeless fears the sleepless fill, a shadow came along the wall.

 Then something let there softly fall 2545 her magic cloak beside her couch.
 Trembling she saw the great hound crouch beside her, heard a deep voice swell as from a tower a far slow bell.

Thus Huan spake, who never before 2550 had uttered words, and but twice more did speak in elven tongue again: ‘Lady beloved, whom all Men, whom Elfinesse, and whom all things
 with fur and fell and feathered wings 2555
 should serve and love – arise! away!
 Put on thy cloak! Before the day comes over Nargothrond we fly to Northern perils, thou and I.’
 And ere he ceased he counsel wrought 2560 for achievement of the thing they sought.
 There Lúthien listened in amaze, and softly on Huan did she gaze.
 Her arms about his neck she cast – in friendship that to death should last. 2565

NOTES

2246 Tavros not emended, nor at lines

- 2263–4 (see p. 195, note to lines 891, 904).
- 2248 of Gods had loved B] of Valar loved A
- 2283 Beleriand] Broseliand A, and B as typed.
- 2385 After this line is written the date ‘April 2nd’. The previous date was 31 March 1928 at line 2114.
- 2423 After this line is written the date ‘April 3rd’. The previous date was 2 April 1928 at line 2385.
- 2442– Cf. lines 1246–8.
4
- 2484– The reference to the hiding of 5 Lúthien’s cloak is not in A.
- 2522– Cf. lines 349–53. Line 2523 is 6 repeated at 2555.
- 2551 But twice more emendation in B; nor ever more A, but once more B as typed.
- 2552 elven: elfin B, but since elfin is changed at almost every occurrence I have done so here.

Commentary on Canto VIII

The development of the narrative of this Canto from the Tale of Tinúviel to The Silmarillion can be followed step by step.

The first stage is seen in the very brief words of the 'Sketch', following on the passage given on p. 220.

Lúthien is imprisoned by Thingol, but escapes and goes in search of Beren. With the aid of Huan lord of dogs she rescues Beren [i.e. from 'Thû the hunter'], and gains entrance to Angband ...

This is too compressed to reveal what ideas underlay it; but at least it is clear that Huan was still independent of any master. In the earliest map Huan is assigned a territory (south and east of Ivrin), and this clearly belongs with the old conception.

Synopsis I, a little later than the 'Sketch' (see p. 220), continues from the point reached on p. 219-20:

Tinúviel flies in her magic robe, she meets Celegorm out hunting, and is pursued by him and captured by Huan his dog and hurt. [Struck out: In redress he offers to help] He offers redress – but cannot help; he lent his Gnomes to Beren and all perished, and so must Beren. Huan goes with her.

A little later in the outline it is said:

It was written in the fate of Huan that he could only be slain by a wolf.

At this stage, where Celegorm was the ruler of Nargothrond to whom Beren went in his trouble, Celegorm 'lent his Gnomes' to Beren;* Lúthien fleeing from Doriath was pursued by Celegorm while out hunting and was hurt by Huan, who now first appears as Celegorm's hound. Here there is no suggestion of evil behaviour towards her (and no mention of Curufin); Celegorm is unable to assist her, further than he has already assisted Beren, but Huan goes with her on her quest: was this the 'redress' for her hurt that Celegorm offered her? It is not said. It is clear that the position of the ruler of Nargothrond as a son of Fëanor, bound by the Oath, must have developed quite differently if this form of the story had been retained, since he was also sworn to aid the kin of Barahir (see below, p. 247)

In Synopsis II, given on p. 233 to the point equivalent to the end of Canto VII, the plot reaches almost to its development in the present Canto of the Lay; but this was achieved in stages, and the original text of the outline was so much changed and extended by later alterations that it would be extremely difficult to follow if set out as hitherto. I give it therefore in two forms. As first written it read:

Curufin and Celegorm go hunting with all their hounds. Huan the sleepless is the chief. He is proof against magic sleep or death – it is his fate to be slain only by the ‘greatest wolf’. They espy Lúthien who flees, but is caught by Huan whom she cannot enchant. The hound bears her to Celegorm, who learns her purpose. Hearing who she is, and falling in love with her he takes away her magic cloak, and holds her captive.

At last he yields to her tears to let her free and give her back her cloak, but he will not aid her because of his oath. Nor does he desire to rescue Felagund, since he is now all-powerful in Nargothrond. She departs from Celegorm. But Huan has become devoted to her, and goes with her.

At this stage, the hunting evidently had no significance in itself: it was the device by which Huan (already in Synopsis I the hound of Celegorm, and with a peculiar fate) was to be brought to accompany Lúthien, an essential feature going back to the Tale of Tinúviel. There is no mention of her being hurt by Huan, as there is in Synopsis I (and so no question of ‘redress’); and here Celegorm falls in love with her and therefore holds her captive. But this is only for a time; he yields to her prayer and gives her back her cloak, though because of his oath he will not aid her; and the evil motive of his desiring to let Felagund perish so that he may retain power in Nargothrond appears. Lúthien leaves Celegorm; Huan goes with her, as in Synopsis I, but the motive is now explicitly the hound's love for her.

After emendation the outline read as follows:

Because of the disguise of Felagund Thû is suspicious and his wolves fare far abroad. Celegorm seizes pretext for a wolf hunt.

Curufin and Celegorm go wolf-hunting guilefully (really to intercept Felagund*) with all their hounds. Huan the sleepless is the chief. (Huan came with him [i.e. Celegorm] from Tavros' halls.) He is proof against magic sleep or death – it is his fate to be slain only by the 'greatest wolf'. They espy Lúthien who flees, but is caught by Huan whom she cannot enchant. The hound bears her to Celegorm, who learns her purpose. Hearing who she is, and falling in love with her, Curufin takes away her magic cloak, and holds her captive. Although she tells him Melian's words and that Felagund and Beren are in Thû's power he won't attempt a rescue even of Felagund. (Marginal note: It is Curufin who put evil into Celegorm's heart.)

In spite of her tears to let her free and give her back her cloak he will not aid her because of his oath and love. Nor does he desire to rescue Felagund, since he is now all-powerful in Nargothrond. But Huan has become devoted to her, and aids her to escape without her cloak.

The hunting of Celegorm and Curufin is now given a sinister import, and is related to the wolves of Thû who 'fare far abroad'. Huan's Valinórean ancestry appears; and Curufin becomes the evil genius of the brothers, and also the lover of Lúthien. Lúthien is now held prisoner in Nargothrond until she escapes by the aid of Huan – but she does not get back her cloak.

Which of the brothers is referred to in the latter part of the emended outline is not clear: as originally written it was Celegorm throughout, but by the change of 'falling in love with her he takes away her magic cloak' to 'falling in love with her Curufin takes away her magic cloak' Curufin becomes the antecedent to all that follows. Whether my father really intended this is hard to say.

When he came to write Canto VIII, on the basis of this emended outline, some further change took place – notably, the return to Lúthien by Huan of her cloak before they left Nargothrond; and the element added to the outline 'It is Curufin who put evil into Celegorm's heart' is expanded. It is now Curufin who suggests the wolfhunt, with its secret intention, and line 2453 shows him as the subtler and more longheaded schemer, standing behind his brother and prompting him – it is clear from lines 2324 ff. that Celegorm has some authority – or is felt by Curufin to have some authority – that Curufin lacks.

Curufin expresses his contempt for Orodreth ('a dullard slow', 2321), and this is the first hint of that weakening of Orodreth's character to which I referred earlier (p. 91). Of course the emergence of Felagund pushed him in any case into a subordinate rôle, as the younger brother of the founder of Nargothrond, and the concomitant development whereby Celegorm and Curufin remained in Nargothrond as powerful interlopers weakened his position still further. It may be that the position imposed on him by the movements in the legend led to the conclusion that he cannot have been made of very stern stuff.

These subtleties in the relationship between Celegorm and Curufin are passed over in the prose version (The Silmarillion pp. 172–3), and there is no suggestion that Curufin was the more sinister of the pair, and the prime mover in their machinations. Celegorm recovers his earlier role as the one who was enamoured of Lúthien. In the Lay appears the motive, not mentioned in Synopsis II, of the intention of Celegorm and Curufin to ally themselves with 'King Thingol's blood' by the forced marriage of Lúthien (lines 2498–2503); and this reappears in The Silmarillion, where it is to Celegorm that Thingol is to be compelled to give her.

The process whereby the legends of Beren and Lúthien on the one hand and of Nargothrond on the other became entwined is now (to this point in the story) almost complete, and this is a convenient point to recapitulate the main shifts in its evolution.

In the Lost Tales Orodreth was lord of the Rodothlim, a people of the Gnomes, in the caves that were to become Nargothrond, but Beren had no connection with the Rodothlim (and Huan had no master). Then Celegorm appeared as the Gnomish prince rescued by Beren's father (Egnor > Barahir) in the battle that afterwards became the Battle of Sudden Flame, to whom he swore an oath of abiding friendship and aid; and Celegorm and Curufin became the founders of Nargothrond after the battle (p. 84). It was to Celegorm that Beren therefore came seeking aid; and Celegorm plays the later role of Felagund in Synopsis I to the extent that he gives him Gnomish guides. Lúthien fleeing from Doriath is caught by Huan, now the hound of Celegorm, and hurt, but this has no outcome beyond the departure of Lúthien in Huan's company (Synopsis I).

The most major change came with the emergence of Felagund and his taking over Celegorm's part both as founder of Nargothrond and as the one rescued by Barahir. Orodreth became his younger brother, the only other son of Finrod to survive the battle in which the Siege of Angband ended. But Celegorm's association with Nargothrond was not abandoned; and his powerful presence there together with that of his brother Curufin – again as a result of the battle – introduces the motive of conflict between the Fëanorians and the King, each held by their own oaths. This conflict had been present in the earlier plot, but there it was a conflict within Celegorm's mind alone, since he had sworn both oaths; there is however no real evidence as to how my father would have treated this, unless we assume from his giving Gnomish guides to Beren in Synopsis I that he gave precedence to his oath to Barahir.

When Lúthien is captured by Huan and taken to Nargothrond she is caught up in the ambitions of Celegorm and Curufin, and indeed her capture itself is made to come about from their evil intentions towards Felagund and determination to prevent his return.

Of Huan it is told in the Lay that he was the only hound of Valinor to come east over the sea (2270). His fate that he should meet death only when 'he encountered the mightiest wolf that would ever walk the world' (The Silmarillion p. 173) appears (already referred to in Synopsis II, pp. 245-6), but it is not said as it is in The Silmarillion that this was because as the hound of Celegorm he came under the Doom of the Noldor. In the A-text of the Lay (note to line 2551) he spoke only once in his life, in the B-text twice; but this was emended to three times, as still in The Silmarillion.

The statement in lines 2248-50 that Oromë alone of Gods had loved the world

before the banners were unfurled
of Moon and Sun

seems to forget Yavanna: see the tale of The Chaining of Melko (l. 98-9) and The Silmarillion pp. 40-1.

The dim cries and horns blowing, / and barking hounds through the trees going (lines 2298-9, repeated with variations in lines 2348-9) derive from the Middle English Lay of Sir Orfeo:

With dim cri & bloweing

& houndes also wip him berking.*

IX

In Wizard's Isle still lay forgot, enmeshed and tortured in that grot cold, evil, doorless, without light, and blank-eyed stared at endless night two comrades. Now alone they were. 2570
The others lived no more, but bare their broken bones would lie and tell how ten had served their master well.

To Felagund then Beren said:
"Twere little loss if I were dead, 2575 and I am minded all to tell,
and thus, perchance, from this dark hell thy life to loose. I set thee free from thine old oath, for more for me hast thou endured than e'er was earned.' 2580

'A! Beren, Beren hast not learned that promises of Morgoth's folk are frail as breath. From this dark yoke of pain shall neither ever go, whether he learn our names or no, 2585 with Thû's consent. Nay more, I think yet deeper of torment we should drink, knew he that son of Barahir and Felagund were captive here, and even worse if he should know 2590

the dreadful errand we did go.'

A devil's laugh they ringing heard within their pit. 'True, true the word
I hear you speak,' a voice then said.
"Twere little loss if he were dead, 2595
the outlaw mortal. But the king, the Elf undying, many a thing no man could suffer may endure.
Perchance, when what these walls immure of dreadful anguish thy folk learn, 2600 their king to ransom they will yearn with gold and gem and high hearts cowed; or maybe Celegorm the proud will deem a rival's prison cheap, and crown and gold himself will keep. 2605 Perchance, the errand I shall know, ere all is done, that ye did go.
The wolf is hungry, the hour is nigh;
no more need Beren wait to die.'

The slow time passed. Then in the gloom 2610 two eyes there glowed. He saw his doom, Beren, silent, as his bonds he strained beyond his mortal might enchained.
Lo! sudden there was rending sound of chains that parted and unwound, 2615 of meshes broken. Forth there leaped upon the wolvish thing that crept in shadow faithful Felagund, careless of fang or venom'd wound.

There in the dark they wrestled slow, 2620 remorseless, snarling, to and fro, teeth in flesh, gripe on throat, fingers locked in shaggy coat, spurning Beren who there lying heard the werewolf gasping, dying. 2625
Then a voice he heard: 'Farewell!
On earth I need no longer dwell, friend and comrade, Beren bold.
My heart is burst, my limbs are cold.
Here all my power I have spent 2630 to break my bonds, and dreadful rent of poisoned teeth is in my breast.
I now must go to my long rest
neath Timbrenting in timeless halls
where drink the Gods, where the light falls 2635 upon the shining sea.' Thus died the king, as elvish singers yet do sing.

There Beren lies. His grief no tear, his despair no horror has nor fear, waiting for footsteps, a voice, for doom. 2640 Silences profounder than the tomb of long-forgotten kings, neath years and sands uncounted laid on biers and buried everlasting-deep, slow and unbroken round him creep. 2645

The silences were sudden shivered to silver fragments. Faint there quivered a voice in song that walls of rock, enchanted hill, and bar and lock,

and powers of darkness pierced with light. 2650
He felt about him the soft night of many stars, and in the air were rustlings and a perfume rare;
the nightingales were in the trees, slim fingers flute and viol seize 2655 beneath the moon, and one more fair than all there be or ever were upon a lonely knoll of stone in shimmering raiment danced alone.
Then in his dream it seemed he sang, 2660 and loud and fierce his chanting rang, old songs of battle in the North, of breathless deeds, of marching forth to dare uncounted odds and break great powers, and towers, and strong walls shake; 2665
and over all the silver fire that once Men named the Burning Briar, the Seven Stars that Varda set about the North, were burning yet, a light in darkness, hope in woe, 2670
the emblem vast of Morgoth's foe.

‘Huan, Huan! I hear a song far under welling, far but strong;
a song that Beren bore aloft.
I hear his voice, I have heard if oft 2675 in dream and wandering.’ Whispering low thus Lúthien spake. On the bridge of woe in mantle wrapped at dead of night she sat and sang, and to its height and to its depth the Wizard's Isle, 2680 rock upon rock and pile on pile, trembling echoed. The werewolves howled, and Huan hidden lay and growled watchful listening in the dark, waiting for battle cruel and stark. 2685

Thû heard that voice, and sudden stood wrapped in his cloak and sable hood in his high tower. He listened long, and smiled, and knew that elvish song.
'A! little Lúthien! What brought 2690
the foolish fly to web unsought?
Morgoth! a great and rich reward to me thou wilt owe when to thy hoard this jewel is added.' Down he went, and forth his messengers he sent. 2695

Still Lúthien sang. A creeping shape with bloodred tongue and jaws agape stole on the bridge; but she sang on with trembling limbs and wide eyes wan.
The creeping shape leaped to her side, 2700 and gasped, and sudden fell and died.

And still they came, still one by one,
and each was seized, and there were none returned with padding feet to tell that a shadow lurketh fierce and fell 2705
at the bridge's end, and that below the shuddering waters loathing flow o'er the grey corpses Huan killed.

A mightier shadow slowly filled the narrow bridge, a slavering hate, 2710

an awful werewolf fierce and great:
pale Draugluin, the old grey lord of wolves and beasts of blood abhorred, that fed on flesh of Man and Elf beneath the chair of Thû himself. 2715

No more in silence did they fight.
Howling and baying smote the night, till back by the chair where he had fed to die the werewolf yammering fled.
'Huan is there' he gasped and died, 2720 and Thû was filled with wrath and pride.
'Before the mightiest he shall fall, before the mightiest wolf of all',
so thought he now, and thought he knew how fate long spoken should come true. 2725

Now there came slowly forth and glared into the night a shape long-haired, dank with poison, with awful eyes wolvish, ravenous; but there lies a light therein more cruel and dread 2730 than ever wolvis eyes had fed.
More huge were its limbs, its jaws more wide, its fangs more gleaming-sharp, and dyed with venom, torment, and with death.
The deadly vapour of its breath 2735 swept on before it. Swooning dies the song of Lúthien, and her eyes are dimmed and darkened with a fear, cold and poisonous and drear.

Thus came Thû, as wolf more great 2740 than e'er was seen from Angband's gate to the burning south, than ever lurked in mortal lands or murder worked.

Sudden he sprang, and Huan leaped aside in shadow. On he swept 2745 to Lúthien lying swooning faint.

To her drowning senses came the taint of his foul breathing, and she stirred;
dizzily she spake a whispered word,
her mantle brushed across his face. 2750

He stumbled staggering in his pace.
Out leaped Huan. Back he sprang.
Beneath the stars there shuddering rang the cry of hunting wolves at bay, the tongue of hounds that fearless slay. 2755

Backward and forth they leaped and ran feinting to flee, and round they span, and bit and grappled, and fell and rose.

Then suddenly Huan holds and throws his ghastly foe; his throat he rends, 2760 choking his life. Not so it ends.

From shape to shape, from wolf to worm,
from monster to his own demon form, Thû changes, but that desperate grip
he cannot shake, nor from it slip. 2765

No wizardry, nor spell, nor dart,
no fang, nor venom, nor devil's art could harm that hound that hart and boar had hunted once in Valinor.

Nigh the foul spirit Morgoth made 2770 and bred of evil shuddering strayed from its dark house, when Lúthien rose and shivering looked upon his throes.

‘O demon dark, O phantom vile of foulness wrought, of lies and guile, 2775 here shalt thou die, thy spirit roam quaking back to thy master’s home his scorn and fury to endure; thee he will in the bowels immure of groaning earth, and in a hole 2780 everlastingly thy naked soul shall wail and gibber – this shall be, unless the keys thou render me of thy black fortress, and the spell that bindeth stone to stone thou tell, 2785 and speak the words of opening.’

With gasping breath and shuddering he spake, and yielded as he must,
and vanquished betrayed his master’s trust.

Lo! by the bridge a gleam of light, 2790 like stars descended from the night to burn and tremble here below.
There wide her arms did Lúthien throw, and called aloud with voice as clear as still at whiles may mortal hear 2795 long elvish trumpets o’er the hill echo, when all the world is still.

The dawn peered over mountains wan, their grey heads silent looked thereon.
The hill trembled; the citadel 2800

crumbled, and all its towers fell;
the rocks yawned and the bridge broke,
and Sirion spumed in sudden smoke.

Like ghosts the owls were flying seen hooting in the dawn, and bats unclean 2805 went skimming dark through the cold airs shrieking thinly to find new lairs in Deadly Nightshade's branches dread.

The wolves whimpering and yammering fled like dusky shadows. Out there creep 2810 pale forms and ragged as from sleep, crawling, and shielding blinded eyes:
the captives in fear and in surprise from dolour long in clinging night beyond all hope set free to light. 2815

A vampire shape with pinions vast screeching leaped from the ground, and passed, its dark blood dripping on the trees;
and Huan neath him lifeless sees a wolvisch corpse – for Thû had flown 2820 to Taur-na-Fuin, a new throne and darker stronghold there to build.

The captives came and wept and shrilled their piteous cries of thanks and praise.
But Lúthien anxious-gazing stays. 2825

Beren comes not. At length she said:
'Huan, Huan, among the dead must we then find him whom we sought, for love of whom we toiled and fought?'

Then side by side from stone to stone 2830 o'er Sirion they climbed. Alone unmoving they him found, who mourned by Felagund, and never turned to see what feet drew halting nigh.

'A! Beren, Beren!' came her cry, 2835
'almost too late have I thee found?
Alas! that here upon the ground the noblest of the noble race in vain thy anguish doth embrace!
Alas! in tears that we should meet 2840 who once found meeting passing sweet!'

Her voice such love and longing filled he raised his eyes, his mourning stilled, and felt his heart new-turned to flame for her that through peril to him came. 2845

'O Lúthien, O Lúthien,
more fair than any child of Men,
O loveliest maid of Elfinesse,
what might of love did thee possess to bring thee here to terror's lair! 2850
O lissom limbs and shadowy hair,
O flower-entwinéd brows so white,
O slender hands in this new light!'

She found his arms and swooned away just at the rising of the day. 2855

NOTES

- 2637 elfin B, not here emended, but it is clear that the intention was to change elfin to elvish (elven) in all cases.
- 2666–7 Cf. lines 377–9 and note. In the present passage A's reading is as B.
- 2699 Line marked with an X on the B-text.
- 2712–13 These lines (referring to Draugluin) not in A.
- 2722–3 Cf. lines 2293–4.
- 2755 Line marked with an X on the B-text.
- 2766–7 Cf. lines 2288–9.
- 2769 After this line is written the date 'April 4th'. The previous date was 3 April 1928 at line 2423.
- 2842 Cf. line 741.
- 2854–5 Cf. the ending of Canto III, lines 756–7.

Commentary on Canto IX

Synopsis I continues from the point reached on p. 244:

Huan goes with her. She goes to the castle of the Lord of Wolves and sings for him. The captives in the dungeons hear her.

It was written in the fate of Huan that he could only be slain by a wolf.

She tells (by arrangement) of the sickness of Huan and so induces the Lord of Wolves to go werewolf and seek him. The wolf-battle of the glade. The 'words of opening' wrung from the Lord of Wolves and the castle broken. Rescue of Beren.

Synopsis II is here less affected by later changes and can be given in a single text (taking it up from the point reached on p. 246).

But Huan has become devoted to her, and aids her to escape without her cloak. [Bracketed: He trails Beren and Felagund to the House of Thû.]

At last only Felagund and Beren remain. It is Beren's turn to be devoured. But Felagund bursts his bonds and wrestles with the werewolf and slays him, but is killed. Beren is reserved for torment.

Lúthien sings outside the house [added: on the bridge of woe] of Thû and Beren hears her voice, and his answering song comes up from underground to Huan's ears.

Thû takes her inside. She tells him a twisted tale – by the desire of Huan, and because without her cloak she cannot enchant him. She tells of her bondage to Celegorm and her capture by Huan of whom she feigns hatred. Of all things in the world Thû hates Huan most. His weird to be slain only by the 'greatest wolf' is known. Lúthien says Huan is lying sick in the woods. Thû disguises himself as a mighty werewolf and is led by her to where Huan is lying in ambush. [Added: But he purposes to make her a thrall.]

There follows the battle of the werewolf. Huan slays Thû's companions and with his teeth in Thû's throat wrests in return for life 'the words of opening' from him. The house of Thû is broken, and the captives set free.

Beren is found [struck out: and borne back to Nargothrond.]

There is also to be considered now another outline, 'Synopsis III', very hastily written and not entirely legible. This outline begins here and I follow it to the end of the narrative in this Canto.

Thû lies choking under Huan. Lúthien arouses. She says 'thou phantom made of foulness by Morgoth, thou shalt die and thy spirit go back in fear to Angband to meet thy master's scorn and languish in the dark bosom of the world, if the "spoken keys" of thy fortress are not yielded.'

With his gasping breath he says them. Lúthien standing on the bridge with her arms spread calls them aloud. The dawn comes pale over the mountains. The hill quivers and gapes, the towers fall, the bridge falls and block[s] Sirion on one side, the dungeons gape. The owls flee away like phantoms in the first light, great bats are seen skimming away to Taur-na-Fuin shrieking thinly. [Added: and one as large as an eagle leads them. The spirit of Thû. His body has a a wolf.] The wolves flee whimpering and yammering. Pale captives blinking in the light creep and crawl into the light. [Struck out: Beren comes forth.] No Beren. They seek for him and find him sitting beside Felagund.

These outlines are of great interest, since they show very clearly an intermediate stage in the evolution of the legend, between the original story of Tevildo Prince of Cats in the Tale of Tinúviel and the story of Thû in the Lay of Leithian. Still present is Lúthien's untrue tale that Huan is lying sick in the woods (see II. 26), and in Synopsis II Thû retains the (originally feline) Tevildo-trait of hating Huan more than any other creature in the world (II. 21). The old element of Tinúviel's entering the castle alone in order to inveigle Tevildo out of it, so that he may be attacked by Huan, was not yet abandoned – but in Synopsis II she does not have her cloak, and so cannot enchant Thû, whereas in the Tale the drowsiness which came upon the doorkeeper cat Umuiyan, and afterwards on Tevildo himself, is ascribed to her ‘robe of sable mist’ (II. 24–5). In the Lay, as in the account in The Silmarillion based on the Lay, Lúthien’s sleep-bearing cloak has come back into the story at this juncture, since Huan retrieved it before they left Nargothrond, and she used it against Thû in the battle on the bridge.

A new element enters in Synopsis I with the singing of Lúthien before Thû, and the captives in the dungeons hearing her; in the old Tale Tinúviel merely spoke very loudly so that Beren might hear her in the kitchen where he toiled. In Synopsis II this element is developed to the final form, with Lúthien singing on the bridge leading to the Wizard’s Isle; but she still enters the castle by herself, before ‘the battle of the werewolf’.

The sentence added in Synopsis II saying that Thû ‘purposes to make her a thrall’ goes back to the Tale (II. 26), and survived into the Lay and The Silmarillion (‘he thought to make her captive and hand her over to the power of Morgoth, for his reward would be great’).

The statement in II that ‘Huan slays Thû’s companions’ doubtless proceeds from the story in the Tale, where when Tevildo set out to find Huan he was accompanied by two of his ‘thanes’, though in the Tale only Oikeroi was slain by Huan, and the other (unnamed) cat fled up a tree, as also did Tevildo himself (II. 28). In II, and in more detail in III, Thû is at Huan’s mercy on the ground. In neither I nor II (III only takes up after this point) is there any suggestion of the wolves coming out from the castle and being slain by Huan one by one and silently, until at last Draugluin came forth; but as I noted in my commentary on the Tale (II. 54–5) ‘the killing of the cat Oikeroi is the germ of Huan’s fight with Draugluin – the skin of Huan’s dead opponent is put to the same use in either case'. This element of the procession of wolves before Thû comes only enters with the poem. The verses naming Draugluin as the last and greatest of them (2712-13) are not in A, but in Lúthien's 'lengthening spell' Draugluin the werewolf pale is named in B (1489), where A has Carcharas.

Most interesting of all the features of this part of the story is that of the 'words of opening' or 'spoken keys', which goes back to the Tale (II. 28-9). I have discussed there (II. 55) the implications of this element in the enlarged context (the fortress of Thû had been an Elvish watchtower): the consequent 'displacement' of the spell that held the stones together.

In Synopsis III appear other features of the final story: the flight of Thû as a great bat; the finding of Beren sitting beside the body of Felagund. The pale captives who creep blinking into the light go back ultimately to the host of cats, reduced by the breaking of Tevildo's spell to puny size, who came forth from the castle in the Tale (II. 29, 55).

In Canto IX the story reaches its final form, and the passage in The Silmarillion derives from it closely, with only minor differences – the chief being the omission of all mention of Thû's voice in the dungeon, which is only found in the poem (lines 2592-2609). The old element still present in Synopsis II of Lúthien entering the castle alone has at last disappeared.

There remain a few matters of interest apart from the development of the story. Felagund's dying words (2633-6):

I now must go to my long rest
neath Timbrenting in timeless halls
where drink the Gods, where the light falls upon the shining sea

are closely similar to Túrin's words of parting to Beleg dead (p. 58, 1408-11):

Now fare well, Beleg, to feasting long neath Tengwethil in the timeless halls where drink the Gods, neath domes golden o'er the sea shining.

As I have said (p. 94), Túrin foresees for Beleg an afterlife in Valinor, in the halls of the Gods, and does not speak, as does Beleg himself in Túrin's dream, of a time of 'waiting':

my life has winged to the long waiting in the halls of the Moon o'er the hills of the sea.

(p. 65, 1696-7)

Very notable are the words about Thû: 'the foul spirit Morgoth made' (line 2770).

In the passage (2666-71) referring to the constellation of the Great Bear is the first suggestion of the idea that Varda set the Seven Stars in the sky as an emblem of hope against Morgoth. Cf. The Silmarillion (p. 174):

[Beren] sang a song of challenge that he had made in praise of the Seven Stars, the Sickle of the Valar that Varda hung above the North as a sign for the fall of Morgoth.

X

Songs have recalled the Elves have sung in old forgotten elven tongue
how Lúthien and Beren strayed by the banks of Sirion. Many a glade they filled with joy, and there their feet 2860
passed by lightly, and days were sweet.
Though winter hunted through the wood,
still flowers lingered where she stood.
Tinúviel! Tinúviel!
the birds are unafraid to dwell 2865 and sing beneath the peaks of snow where Beren and where Lúthien go.

The isle in Sirion they left behind;
but there on hill-top might one find a green grave, and a stone set, 2870 and there there lie the white bones yet of Felagund, of Finrod's son – unless that land is changed and gone,
or foundered in unfathomed seas,
while Felagund laughs beneath the trees 2875
in Valinor, and comes no more
to this grey world of tears and war.

To Nargothrond no more he came;
but thither swiftly ran the fame
of their king dead, of Thû o'erthrown, 2880 of the breaking of the towers of stone.
For many now came home at last,

who long ago to shadow passed;
and like a shadow had returned Huan the hound, and scant had earned 2885 or praise or thanks of master wroth;
yet loyal he was, though he was loath.
The halls of Narog clamours fill that vainly Celegorm would still.
There men bewailed their fallen king, 2890
crying that a maiden dared that thing which sons of Fëanor would not do.
'Let us slay these faithless lords untrue!'
the fickle folk now loudly cried with Felagund who would not ride. 2895 Orodreth spake: 'The kingdom now is mine alone. I will allow no spilling of kindred blood by kin.
But bread nor rest shall find herein these brothers who have set at nought 2900 the house of Finrod.' They were brought.
Scornful, unbowed, and unashamed stood Celegorm. In his eye there flamed a light of menace. Curufin smiled with his crafty mouth and thin. 2905

'Be gone for ever - ere the day shall fall into the sea. Your way shall never lead you hither more,
nor any son of Fëanor;
nor ever after shall be bond 2910 of love twixt yours and Nargothrond.'

'We will remember it,' they said,

and turned upon their heels, and sped,
and took their horses and such folk as still them followed. Nought they spoke 2915 but sounded horns, and rode like fire, and went away in anger dire.

Towards Doriath the wanderers now were drawing nigh. Though bare the bough, though cold the wind, and grey the grasses 2920 through which the hiss of winter passes, they sang beneath the frosty sky
uplifted o'er them pale and high.
They came to Mindeb's narrow stream that from the hills doth leap and gleam 2925
by western borders where begin the spells of Melian to fence in King Thingol's land, and stranger steps to wind bewildered in their webs.

There sudden sad grew Beren's heart: 2930
'Alas, Tinúviel, here we part and our brief song together ends, and sundered ways each lonely wends!'

'Why part we here? What dost thou say, just at the dawn of brighter day?' 2935

'For safe thou'rt come to borderlands o'er which in the keeping of the hands of Melian thou wilt walk at ease and find thy home and well-loved trees.'

‘My heart is glad when the fair trees far off uprising grey it sees of Doriath inviolate.

Yet Doriath my heart did hate,
and Doriath my feet forsook, my home, my kin. I would not look on grass nor leaf there evermore without thee by me. Dark the shore of Esgalduin the deep and strong!

Why there alone forsaking song by endless waters rolling past must I then hopeless sit at last, and gaze at waters pitiless in heartache and in loneliness?’

‘For never more to Doriath can Beren find the winding path, though Thingol willed it or allowed;

for to thy father there I vowed to come not back save to fulfill the quest of the shining Silmaril, and win by valour my desire.

“Not rock nor steel nor Morgoth’s fire
nor all the power of Elfinesse, shall keep the gem I would possess”:
thus swore I once of Lúthien
more fair than any child of Men.

My word, alas! I must achieve, though sorrow pierce and parting grieve.’

‘Then Lúthien will not go home,
but weeping in the woods will roam,

nor peril heed, nor laughter know. 2970
And if she may not by thee go against thy will thy desperate feet she will pursue, until they meet, Beren and Lúthien, love once more on earth or on the shadowy shore.' 2975

‘Nay, Lúthien, most brave of heart, thou makest it more hard to part.
Thy love me drew from bondage drear,
but never to that outer fear, that darkest mansion of all dread, 2980 shall thy most blissful light be led.’

‘Never, never!’ he shuddering said.
But even as in his arms she pled,
a sound came like a hurrying storm.
There Curufin and Celegorm 2985 in sudden tumult like the wind rode up. The hooves of horses dinned loud on the earth. In rage and haste madly northward they now raced the path twixt Doriath to find 2990 and the shadows dreadly dark entwined of Taur-na-Fuin. That was their road most swift to where their kin abode in the east, where Himling’s watchful hill
o’er Aglon’s gorge hung tall and still. 2995

They saw the wanderers. With a shout straight on them swung their hurrying rout, as if neath maddened hooves to rend

the lovers and their love to end.
But as they came the horses swerved	3000 with nostrils wide and proud necks curved; Curufin, stooping, to saddlebow with mighty arm did Lúthien throw, and laughed. Too soon; for there a spring fiercer than tawny lion-king	3005
maddened with arrows barbéd smart, greater than any hornéd hart that hounded to a gulf leaps o'er, there Beren gave, and with a roar leaped on Curufin; round his neck	3010 his arms entwined, and all to wreck both horse and rider fell to ground;
and there they fought without a sound.
Dazed in the grass did Lúthien lie beneath bare branches and the sky;	3015
the Gnome felt Beren's fingers grim close on his throat and strangle him, and out his eyes did start, and tongue gasping from his mouth there hung.
Up rode Celegorm with his spear,	3020 and bitter death was Beren near.
With elvish steel he nigh was slain whom Lúthien won from hopeless chain, but baying Huan sudden sprang before his master's face with fang	3025
white-gleaming, and with bristling hair,
as if he on boar or wolf did stare.
The horse in terror leaped aside, and Celegorm in anger cried:
'Curse thee, thou baseborn dog, to dare	3030

against thy master teeth to bare!’ But dog nor horse nor rider bold would venture near the anger cold of mighty Huan fierce at bay.

Red were his jaws. They shrank away, 3035 and fearful eyed him from afar:
nor sword nor knife, nor scimitar, no dart of bow, nor cast of spear, master nor man did Huan fear.

There Curufin had left his life, 3040 had Lúthien not stayed that strife.
Waking she rose and softly cried standing distressed at Beren’s side:

‘Forbear thy anger now, my lord!
nor do the work of Orcs abhorred; 3045 for foes there be of Elfinesse unnumbered, and they grow not less, while here we war by ancient curse distraught, and all the world to worse decays and crumbles. Make thy peace!’ 3050

Then Beren did Curufin release;
but took his horse and coat of mail,
and took his knife there gleaming pale,
hanging sheathless, wrought of steel.

No flesh could leeches ever heal 3055 that point had pierced; for long ago the dwarves had made it, singing slow enchantments, where their hammers fell in Nogrod ringing like a bell.

Iron as tender wood it cleft, 3060 and sundered mail like woollen weft.

But other hands its haft now held;
its master lay by mortal felled.
Beren uplifting him, far him flung, and cried 'Begone!', with stinging tongue; 3065
'Begone! thou renegade and fool, and let thy lust in exile cool!
Arise and go, and no more work like Morgoth's slaves or curséd Orc; and deal, proud son of Fëanor, 3070 in deeds more proud than heretofore!'
Then Beren led Lúthien away, while Huan still there stood at bay.

'Farewell,' cried Celegorm the fair.
'Far get you gone! And better were 3075 to die forhungered in the waste than wrath of Fëanor's sons to taste, that yet may reach o'er dale and hill.
No gem, nor maid, nor Silmaril shall ever long in thy grasp lie! 3080
We curse thee under cloud and sky,
we curse thee from rising unto sleep!
Farewell!' He swift from horse did leap, his brother lifted from the ground;
then bow of yew with gold wire bound 3085
he strung, and shaft he shooting sent,
as heedless hand in hand they went;
a dwarvish dart and cruelly hooked.
They never turned nor backward looked.
Loud bayed Huan, and leaping caught 3090 the speeding arrow. Quick as thought another followed deadly singing;

but Beren had turned, and sudden springing defended Lúthien with his breast.
Deep sank the dart in flesh to rest. 3095
He fell to earth. They rode away, and laughing left him as he lay;
yet spurred like wind in fear and dread of Huan's pursuing anger red.
Though Curufin with bruised mouth laughed, 3100 yet later of that dastard shaft was tale and rumour in the North, and Men remembered at the Marching Forth, and Morgoth's will its hatred helped.

Thereafter never hound was whelped 3105 would follow horn of Celegorm or Curufin. Though in strife and storm, though all their house in ruin red went down, thereafter laid his head Huan no more at that lord's feet, 3110 but followed Lúthien, brave and fleet.
Now sank she weeping at the side of Beren, and sought to stem the tide of welling blood that flowed there fast.
The raiment from his breast she cast; 3115 from shoulder plucked the arrow keen;
his wound with tears she washed it clean.

Then Huan came and bore a leaf, of all the herbs of healing chief,
that evergreen in woodland glade 3120
there grew with broad and hoary blade.
The powers of all grasses Huan knew,

who wide did forest-paths pursue.
Therewith the smart he swift allayed, while Lúthien murmuring in the shade 3125
the staunching song, that Elvish wives long years had sung in those sad lives of war and weapons, wove o'er him.

The shadows fell from mountains grim.
Then sprang about the darkened North 3130
the Sickle of the Gods, and forth each star there stared in stony night radiant, glistening cold and white.
But on the ground there is a glow, a spark of red that leaps below: 3135
under woven boughs beside a fire of crackling wood and sputtering briar there Beren lies in drowsing deep, walking and wandering in sleep.
Watchful bending o'er him wakes 3140
a maiden fair; his thirst she slakes, his brow caresses, and softly croons a song more potent than in runes or leeches' lore hath since been writ.
Slowly the nightly watches flit. 3145
The misty morning crawleth grey from dusk to the reluctant day.

Then Beren woke and opened eyes, and rose and cried: 'Neath other skies,
in lands more awful and unknown, 3150
I wandered long, methought, alone to the deep shadow where the dead dwell;

but ever a voice that I knew well,
like bells, like viols, like harps, like birds, like music moving without words, 3155 called me, called me through the night, enchanted drew me back to light!
Healed the wound, assuaged the pain!
Now are we come to morn again,
new journeys once more lead us on - 3160 to perils whence may life be won, hardly for Beren; and for thee a waiting in the wood I see, beneath the trees of Doriath, while ever follow down my path 3165
the echoes of thine elvish song, where hills are haggard and roads are long.'

'Nay, now no more we have for foe dark Morgoth only, but in woe, in wars and feuds of Elfinesse 3170 thy quest is bound; and death, no less, for thee and me, for Huan bold
the end of weird of yore foretold, all this I bode shall follow swift, if thou go on. Thy hand shall lift 3175 and lay in Thingol's lap the dire and flaming jewel, Fëanor's fire, never, never! A why then go?
Why turn we not from fear and woe beneath the trees to walk and roam 3180 roofless, with all the world as home, over mountains, beside the seas,
in the sunlight, in the breeze?'

Thus long they spoke with heavy hearts;
and yet not all her elvish arts,	3185
nor lissom arms, nor shining eyes as tremulous stars in rainy skies, nor tender lips, enchanted voice,
his purpose bent or swayed his choice.
Never to Doriath would he fare	3190 save guarded fast to leave her there; never to Nargothrond would go with her, lest there came war and woe;
and never would in the world untrod to wander suffer her, worn, unshod,	3195 roofless and restless, whom he drew with love from the hidden realms she knew.
'For Morgoth's power is now awake; already hill and dale doth shake,
the hunt is up, the prey is wild:	3200
a maiden lost, an elven child.
Now Orcs and phantoms prowl and peer from tree to tree, and fill with fear each shade and hollow. Thee they seek!
At thought thereof my hope grows weak,	3205
my heart is chilled. I curse mine oath, I curse the fate that joined us both and snared thy feet in my sad doom of flight and wandering in the gloom!
Now let us haste, and ere the day	3210 be fallen, take our swiftest way, till o'er the marches of thy land beneath the beech and oak we stand in Doriath, fair Doriath
whither no evil finds the path,	3215

powerless to pass the listening leaves that droop upon those forest-eaves.'

Then to his will she seeming bent.
Swiftly to Doriath they went,
and crossed its borders. There they stayed 3220 resting in deep and mossy glade;
there lay they sheltered from the wind under mighty beeches silken-skinned, and sang of love that still shall be,
though earth be foundered under sea, 3225 and sundered here for evermore shall meet upon the Western Shore.

One morning as asleep she lay upon the moss, as though the day too bitter were for gentle flower 3230 to open in a sunless hour, Beren arose and kissed her hair,
and wept, and softly left her there.

'Good Huan,' said he, 'guard her well!
In leafless field no asphodel, 3235 in thorny thicket never a rose forlorn, so frail and fragrant blows.
Guard her from wind and frost, and hide from hands that seize and cast aside; keep her from wandering and woe, 3240 for pride and fate now make me go.'

The horse he took and rode away, nor dared to turn; but all that day with heart as stone he hastened forth

NOTES

- 2877 Against this line is written the date
 ‘April 5th’. The previous date was 4 April 1928 at line 2769.
- 2929 At the end of this line is written the date ‘April 6th’.
- 2950– Cf. lines 649–52, 1220–3.
 3
- 2998 Against this line is written the date ‘April 27th 1928’.
- 3031 Before this line is written the date ‘Nov. 1929’. This date may refer forward or backward; but both it and the text that follows are written with a slightly finer nib than that used for the preceding portion of the poem.
 The previous date was 27 April 1928 at line 2998.
- 3076– Against these seven lines, as first 84 written in the margin of the manuscript A, is the date ‘Sept.
 1930’.
- 3119 Against this line my father wrote in the margin of the B-text the word athelas. In The Fellowship of the Ring (I. 12) Aragorn said that it was brought to Middle-earth by the Númenóreans.

- 3220 After the word borders is written the date '25 September 1930'.
- 3242– These last four lines of the Canto are 5 only found in A, but I suspect that they were omitted inadvertently.

Commentary on Canto X

The development of the story in this Canto can again be followed step by step in the outlines. In the Tale of Tinúviel (II. 30–1) Beren and Tinúviel wandered away with Huan after the defeat of Tevildo, and it was her desire to return to Artanor but unwillingness to part from Beren that led to their resolve to try to gain a Silmaril. The catskin of Oikeroi, thane of Tevildo, was carried by Huan as a trophy, and they begged it from him; it was in the guise of a cat that Beren went to Angband. Synopsis I says no more of this part of the narrative than 'Tinúviel and Beren disguised as a werewolf go to Angband', and apart from the fact that the skin was that of a werewolf and not of a cat there had probably been no development from the Tale.

Synopsis II continues from the point reached on p. 257 as follows:

Lúthien tends Beren in the wood. Huan brings news to Nargothrond. The Gnomes drive forth Curufin and Celegorm, grieving for Felagund, and send the cloak back to Lúthien. Lúthien takes her cloak again and led by Huan they go to Angband. By his guidance and her magic they escape capture. Huan dare not come any further. Beren is disguised as a werewolf. They enter Angband.

The sentences 'and send the cloak back to Lúthien. Lúthien takes her cloak again' were changed at the time of writing to read: 'and send to succour Beren and Lúthien. Huan brings Lúthien back her cloak again.' (This outline was written of course before my father reached Canto VIII, at the end of which Huan brought Lúthien her cloak before she escaped from Nargothrond.)

Here Synopsis II ends. At the bottom of the page is written very roughly:

Celegorm's embassy to Thingol so that Thingol knows or thinks he knows Beren dead and Lúthien in Nargothrond.

Why Celegorm and Curufin hated by Thingol...
The loss of Dairon.

While the expulsion of Celegorm and Curufin from Nargothrond is now first mentioned, it is clear that the story of their attack on Beren and Lúthien did not exist. Huan brings the news of the destruction of the Wizard's Tower, but it seems that he does not leave Nargothrond with Celegorm and brings back the cloak to Lúthien independently.

Synopsis III has been given on p. 257 to the point where Lúthien and Huan find Beren 'sitting beside Felagund'. I give the next portion of this outline as it was first written:

They hallow the isle and bury Felagund on its top, and no wolf or evil creature will ever come there again. Beren is led into the woods. [The following sentence was bracketed with a marginal direction that it should come later: Morgoth hearing of the breaking of the Wizard's Tower sends out an army of Orcs; finding the wolves are slain with throats he thinks it is Huan and fashions a vast wolf – Carcharas – mightiest of all wolves to guard his door.]

They hide in Taur-na-Fuin careful not to lose sight of light at edge. Lúthien bids Beren desist. He cannot, he says, return to Doriath. Then, she says, she will live in the woods with Beren and Huan. But he has spoken his word; he has vowed not to fear Morgoth ... hell. Then she says [that she] fears that their lives will all be forfeit. But life perchance lies after death. Where Beren goes she goes. This gives him pause. They ask Huan. He speaks for second and last time. 'No more may Huan go with you – what you see at the gate, he will see later – his fate does not lead to Angband. Perchance, though his eyes are dim, [?thy] paths lead out of it again.' He goes to Nargothrond. They will not return to Nargothrond with him.

Lúthien and Beren leave Taur-na-Fuin and wander about together a while. Longing to look on Doriath seizes her and Beren thinks of the quest unaccomplished. Beren offers to lead her to the borders of Doriath, but they cannot bear to part.

They go to the Wizard's Isle and take a 'wolf-ham' and a bat-robe. Thus they trembling inwardly set forth. The journey to Angband over Dor-na-Fauglith and into the dark ravines of the hills.

Here first appears the burial of Felagund on the summit of the isle, and its hallowing. This outline makes no mention of the events in Nargothrond, and concentrates exclusively on Beren and Lúthien. They are in Taur-na-Fuin, and Huan is with them; and we have the first version of Huan's counsel to them, and his foreseeing that what they meet at the Gate of Angband he will himself see later. Since the attack by Celegorm and Curufin had still not been devised, the story is briefer than it was to become; thus Huan speaks to them in Taur-na-Fuin soon after the destruction of the Wizard's Tower, and then departs to Nargothrond, while they after a while go to the Isle and take the 'wolf-ham' ('wolf-hame' in The Silmarillion p. 178, Old English hama) and 'bat-robe', which now first appear (though the 'wolf-hame' derives from the catskin of Oikeroi in the Tale). From the words 'They will not return to Nargothrond with him' and from the fact that as the outline was written he is not mentioned again, it is clear that Huan was now out of the story (until his reappearance in a later episode). His speech is here called 'the second and last time' that he spoke with words. Afterwards the story was changed in this point, for he spoke to Beren a third time at his death (see note to line 2551).

Pencilled changes were made to this passage of Synopsis III, and these move the narrative a long way to the final version:

They hallow the isle and bury Felagund on its top, and no wolf or evil creature will ever come there again.

Lúthien and Beren leave Taur-na-Fuin and wander about together a while. Longing to look on Doriath seizes her and Beren thinks of the quest unaccomplished. Beren offers to lead her to the borders of Doriath, but they cannot bear to part.

News by captives and Huan is brought to Nargothrond. Celegorm and Curufin in a revulsion of feeling the Nargothronders wish to slay them. Orodreth will not. They are exiled and all Fëanorians from Nargothrond for ever. They ride off. Assault of Celegorm and Curufin in wood on Beren and Lúthien. Rescue by Huan. Beren wrestles with Curufin and gets his magic knife – [eight further words illegible] Huan brings them a wolf-ham. Thus they trembling inwardly set forth. Huan speaks for last time and says farewell. He will not come. The journey to Angband, &c.

Here more is told of the expulsion of Celegorm and Curufin from Nargothrond, and Orodreth's refusal to allow them to be slain, and here at last is mention – probably written here at the very time of its devising – of the attack on Beren and Lúthien as the Fëanorians rode from Nargothrond. The desertion of Celegorm by Huan is implied; Beren gets Curufin's knife, which is to replace the knife from Tevildo's kitchens as the implement with which Beren cut the Silmaril from the Iron Crown; and it is Huan who gets the wolfskin, and then utters his parting speech.

An extremely difficult page in pencil ('Synopsis IV') shows these new elements being developed further:

Beren's heart grows sad. He says he has led Tinúviel back to the border of her land where she is safe. Alas for their second parting. She says but from this land she herself escaped and fled only to be with him – yet she admits that her heart longs for Doriath and Melian too, but not Doriath without him. He quotes his own words to Thingol: 'Not Morgoth's fire &c.' – and says he cannot (even if Thingol would allow) return emptyhanded she will not go back. She will wander in the woods – and if he will not take her with him she will follow his feet against his will. He protests – at this moment Celegorm and Curufin ride up seeking the way North struck out at time of writing: [round Doriath by the Gorgoroth] between Doriath and Taur-na-Fuin to the Gorge of Aglon and their own kin.

They ride straight on and seek to ride Beren down. Curufin stoops and lifts Lúthien to his saddle. Beren leaps aside and leaps at Curufin's neck [?hurling] him down. Celegorm with his spear rides up to slay Beren. Huan intervenes scattering the [?brothers'] folk and dogs and holds Celegorm at bay while Beren wrestles with Curufin and chokes him senseless. Beren takes his weapons – especially his magic knife, and bids him get on horse and be gone. They ride off. Huan stays with Beren and Lúthien and forsakes his master [?for ever]. Celegorm suddenly turns and shoots an arrow at Huan which of course falls harmless from him, but Curufin shoots at Beren (and Lúthien) [changed to: shoots at Lúthien] and wounds Beren.

Lúthien heals Beren. They tell Huan of their doubts and debate and he goes off and brings the wolfham and batskin from the Wizard's Isle. Then he speaks for the last time.

They prepare to go to Angband.

This was certainly prepared as an outline for Canto 10 of the Lay, for the section of the synopsis that follows is headed '11'.

There is here the further development that Beren and Lúthien have come to the borders of Doriath; but the solitary departure of Beren after his healing, leaving Lúthien with Huan, has still not emerged. There are a few differences in the account of the fight with Celegorm and Curufin from the final form, but for the most part the detail of the events was never changed from its first writing down (as I believe it to be) on this page. There is here no mention of Beren's taking Curufin's horse, on which he was later to ride north by himself to Anfauglith; and the detail of the shooting is different – in the synopsis Celegorm aimed at Huan, and Curufin (who seems to have retained his bow, though Beren took all his weapons) at (Beren and) Lúthien. There is also mention of 'folk' accompanying the brothers on their journey from Nargothrond.

In this outline is the first occurrence of the name Gorgoroth.

There is one further outline ('Synopsis V'), consisting of four pages that are the concluding part of a text of which the beginning has disappeared: it begins with a heading '10 continued', which is certainly a Canto number, though the content extends much beyond the end of Canto X in the Lay.* The text takes up with the healing of Beren's wound.

Huan brings a herb of healing, and Lúthien and the hound tend Beren in the forest, building a hut of boughs.

Beren mending will still go on his quest. But Lúthien foretells that all their lives will be forfeit if they pursue. Beren will not go back to Doriath otherwise. Nor will he or Huan go to Nargothrond, or keep Lúthien in Thingol's despite, for war would certainly arise twixt Elf and Elf, [? even] if Orodreth harboured them. 'Then why shall we not dwell here in the wood?' saith Lúthien. Because of danger outside Doriath, and the Orcs, and the knowledge Morgoth must now possess of Lúthien's wandering.

One morning early Beren steals away on Curufin's horse and reaches the eaves of Taur-na-Fuin.

Here at last is the element of Beren's solitary departure.

The casting out of Celegorm and Curufin from Nargothrond in the Lay is very closely followed in The Silmarillion (even to phrases, as 'neither bread nor rest'); in the Lay, however, there are some who will go with them (lines 2914-15), a detail found in Synopsis IV, whereas in The Silmarillion it is explicit that they went alone.*

The debate between Beren and Lúthien which was interrupted by the coming of Celegorm and Curufin (lines 2930-82) is clearly based on the scheme of it given in Synopsis IV (p. 272); in The Silmarillion it reappears, though much reduced and changed. The fight with Celegorm and Curufin is likewise derived from Synopsis IV, and is followed in the prose of The Silmarillion - with such detail as the cursing of Beren 'under cloud and sky', and Curufin's knife that would cut iron as if it were green wood, hanging sheathless by his side. In the Lay the knife becomes a dwarf-made weapon from Nogrod, though neither it nor its maker is yet named. In the Lay the shooter of the treacherous shafts is Celegorm; in The Silmarillion it is Curufin, using Celegorm's bow, and the vile act is settled on the wickeder (as he was certainly also the cleverer) of the brothers - in this Canto he is given the proper visage of a cunning villain: 'with his crafty mouth and thin' (2905). The reference of line 3103 'and Men remembered at the Marching Forth' is to the Union of Maidros before the Battle of Unnumbered Tears.

The second debate between Beren and Lúthien after his recovery from the wound is derived from Synopsis V; it is not present at all in The Silmarillion, though it is not without its importance in its representation of Beren's utter determination in the face of Lúthien's persuasions to abandon the quest.

Two new elements in the geography appear in this Canto: the Hill of Himling (later Himring) rising to the east of the Gorge of Aglon (2994), and the river Mindeb: lines 2924-5 (and the rewritten verses given on p. 360) seem to be the only description of it anywhere.

The curious element of Morgoth's particular interest in Lúthien (so that he sent the Orc-captain Boldog to Doriath to capture her, lines 2127-36) reappears in this Canto (3198-3201).

At the beginning of the Canto the burial of Felagund leads to a further reference to his fate after death without mention of Mandos (see p. 259):

while Felagund laughs beneath the trees
in Valinor, and comes no more
to this grey world of tears and war.

XI

Once wide and smooth a plain was spread, where King Fingolfin proudly led his silver armies on the green, his horses white, his lances keen;
his helmets tall of steel were hewn, 3250
his shields were shining as the moon.

There trumpets sang both long and loud, and challenge rang unto the cloud that lay on Morgoth's northern tower, while Morgoth waited for his hour. 3255

Rivers of fire at dead of night in winter lying cold and white upon the plain burst forth, and high the red was mirrored in the sky.
From Hithlum's walls they saw the fire, 3260
the steam and smoke in spire on spire leap up, till in confusion vast the stars were choked. And so it passed, the mighty field, and turned to dust, to drifting sand and yellow rust, 3265
to thirsty dunes where many bones lay broken among barren stones.

Dor-na-Faughlith, Land of Thirst, they after named it, waste accurst, the raven-haunted roofless grave 3270
of many fair and many brave.
Thereon the stony slopes look forth from Deadly Nightshade falling north, from sombre pines with pinions vast,

black-plumed and drear, as many a mast 3275
of sable-shrouded ships of death slow wafted on a ghostly breath.

Thence Beren grim now gazes out across the dunes and shifting drought, and sees afar the frowning towers 3280
where thunderous Thangorodrim lowers.

The hungry horse there drooping stood, proud Gnomish steed; it feared the wood;
upon the haunted ghastly plain no horse would ever stride again. 3285

‘Good steed of master ill,’ he said, ‘farewell now here! Lift up thy head, and get thee gone to Sirion’s vale,
back as we came, past island pale where Thû once reigned, to waters sweet 3290 and grasses long about thy feet.

And if Curufin no more thou find, grieve not! but free with hart and hind go wander, leaving work and war, and dream thee back in Valinor, 3295 whence came of old thy mighty race
from Tavros’ mountain-fencéd chase.’

There still sat Beren, and he sang, and loud his lonely singing rang.
Though Orc should hear, or wolf a-prowl, 3300 or any of the creatures foul within the shade that slunk and stared of Taur-na-Fuin, nought he cared, who now took leave of light and day,

grim-hearted, bitter, fierce and fey. 3305

‘Farewell now here, ye leaves of trees, your music in the morning-breeze!
Farewell now blade and bloom and grass that see the changing seasons pass; ye waters murmuring over stone, 3310 and meres that silent stand alone!
Farewell now mountain, vale, and plain!
Farewell now wind and frost and rain,
and mist and cloud, and heaven’s air;
ye star and moon so blinding-fair 3315
that still shall look down from the sky on the wide earth, though Beren die – though Beren die not, and yet deep, deep, whence comes of those that weep no dreadful echo, lie and choke 3320 in everlasting dark and smoke.

‘Farewell sweet earth and northern sky,
for ever blest, since here did lie,
and here with lissom limbs did run, beneath the moon, beneath the sun, 3325 Lúthien Tinúviel
more fair than mortal tongue can tell.
Though all to ruin fell the world, and were dissolved and backward hurled unmade into the old abyss, 3330 yet were its making good, for this – the dawn, the dusk, the earth, the sea – that Lúthien on a time should be!’

His blade he lifted high in hand, and challenging alone did stand 3335
before the threat of Morgoth's power;
and dauntless cursed him, hall and tower, o'ershadowing hand and grinding foot, beginning, end, and crown and root;
then turned to stride forth down the slope 3340 abandoning fear, forsaking hope.

'A, Beren, Beren!' came a sound,
'almost too late have I thee found!
O proud and fearless hand and heart, not yet farewell, not yet we part! 3345 Not thus do those of elven race forsake the love that they embrace.
A love is mine, as great a power as thine, to shake the gate and tower of death with challenge weak and frail 3350 that yet endures, and will not fail nor yield, unvanquished were it hurled beneath the foundations of the world.
Beloved fool! escape to seek from such pursuit; in might so weak 3355 to trust not, thinking it well to save from love thy loved, who welcomes grave and torment sooner than in guard of kind intent to languish, barred, wingless and helpless him to aid 3360 for whose support her love was made!'

Thus back to him came Lúthien:
they met beyond the ways of Men;

upon the brink of terror stood between the desert and the wood. 3365

He looked on her, her lifted face beneath his lips in sweet embrace:
'Thrice now mine oath I curse,' he said,
'that under shadow thee hath led!
But where is Huan, where the hound 3370
to whom I trusted, whom I bound by love of thee to keep thee well from deadly wandering unto hell?'

'I know not! But good Huan's heart is wiser, kinder than thou art, 3375 grim lord, more open unto prayer!
Yet long and long I pleaded there, until he brought me, as I would,
upon thy trail – a palfrey good would Huan make, of flowing pace: 3380 thou wouldst have laughed to see us race, as Orc on werewolf ride like fire night after night through fen and mire, through waste and wood! But when I heard thy singing clear – (yea, every word 3385 of Lúthien one rashly cried, and listening evil fierce defied) –,
he set me down, and sped away;
but what he would I cannot say.'

Ere long they knew, for Huan came, 3390 his great breath panting, eyes like flame, in fear lest her whom he forsook to aid some hunting evil took ere he was nigh. Now there he laid before their feet, as dark as shade, 3395 two grisly shapes that he had won from that tall isle in Sirion:

a wolfhame huge – its savage fell was long and matted, dark the spell that drenched the dreadful coat and skin, 3400 the werewolf cloak of Draugluin;
the other was a batlike garb with mighty fingered wings, a barb like iron nail at each joint's end – such wings as their dark cloud extend 3405 against the moon, when in the sky from Deadly Nightshade screeching fly Thû's messengers.

‘What hast thou brought,
good Huan? What thy hidden thought?
Of trophy of prowess and strong deed, 3410 when Thû thou vanquishedst, what need here in the waste?’ Thus Beren spoke, and once more words in Huan woke:
his voice was like the deeptoned bells
that ring in Valmar's citadels: 3415

‘Of one fair gem thou must be thief, Morgoth's or Thingol's, loath or lief;
thou must here choose twixt love and oath!
If vow to break is still thee loath, then Lúthien must either die 3420 alone, or death with thee defie beside thee, marching on your fate that hidden before you lies in wait.

Hopeless the quest, but not yet mad, unless thou, Beren, run thus clad 3425 in mortal raiment, mortal hue, witless and redeless, death to woo.

‘Lo! good was Felagund’s device, but may be bettered, if advice 3430 of Huan ye will dare to take,
and swift a hideous change will make to forms most curséd, foul and vile, of werewolf of the Wizard’s Isle, of monstrous bat’s envermined fell with ghostly clawlike wings of hell. 3435

‘To such dark straits, alas! now brought are ye I love, for whom I fought.
Nor further with you can I go – whoever did a great hound know 3440 in friendship at a werewolf’s side to Angband’s grinning portals stride?
Yet my heart tells that at the gate what there ye find, ’twill be my fate myself to see, though to that door my feet shall bear me nevermore. 3445
Darkened is hope and dimmed my eyes,
I see not clear what further lies;
yet maybe backwards leads your path beyond all hope to Doriath, and thither, perchance, we three shall wend, 3450 and meet again before the end.’

They stood and marvelled thus to hear his mighty tongue so deep and clear;

then sudden he vanished from their sight even at the onset of the night. 3455

His dreadful counsel then they took,
and their own gracious forms forsook;
in werewolf fell and batlike wing prepared to robe them, shuddering.

With elvish magic Lúthien wrought, 3460 lest raiment foul with evil fraught to dreadful madness drive their hearts; and there she wrought with elvish arts a strong defence, a binding power, singing until the midnight hour. 3465

Swift as the wolvis coat he wore, Beren lay slavering on the floor, redtongued and hungry; but there lies a pain and longing in his eyes, a look of horror as he sees 3470
a batlike form crawl to its knees and drag its creased and creaking wings.
Then howling under moon he springs fourfooted, swift, from stone to stone, from hill to plain – but not alone: 3475
a dark shape down the slope doth skim, and wheeling flitters over him.

Ashes and dust and thirsty dune withered and dry beneath the moon, under the cold and shifting air 3480 sifting and sighing, bleak and bare;

of blistered stones and gasping sand,
of splintered bones was built that land, o'er which now slinks with powdered fell and hanging tongue a shape of hell. 3485

Many parching leagues lay still before when sickly day crept back once more;
many choking miles yet stretched ahead when shivering night once more was spread with doubtful shadow and ghostly sound 3490
that hissed and passed o'er dune and mound.

A second morning in cloud and reek struggled, when stumbling, blind and weak, a wolvisish shape came staggering forth and reached the foothills of the North; 3495 upon its back there folded lay a crumpled thing that blinked at day.

The rocks were reared like bony teeth, and claws that grasped from opened sheath, on either side the mournful road 3500 that onward led to that abode far up within the Mountain dark with tunnels drear and portals stark.

They crept within a scowling shade, and cowering darkly down them laid. 3505 Long lurked they there beside the path, and shivered, dreaming of Doriath, of laughter and music and clean air,
in fluttered leaves birds singing fair.

They woke, and felt the trembling sound, 3510
the beating echo far underground shake beneath them, the rumour vast of Morgoth's forges; and aghast they heard the tramp of stony feet that shod with iron went down that street: 3515

the Orcs went forth to rape and war, and Balrog captains marched before.

They stirred, and under cloud and shade at eve stepped forth, and no more stayed;
as dark things on dark errand bent 3520 up the long slopes in haste they went.
Ever the sheer cliffs rose beside,
where birds of carrion sat and cried;
and chasms black and smoking yawned, whence writhing serpent-shapes were spawned; 3525
until at last in that huge gloom, heavy as overhanging doom, that weighs on Thangorodrim's foot like thunder at the mountain's root, they came, as to a sombre court 3530 walled with great towers, fort on fort of cliffs embattled, to that last plain that opens, abysmal and inane, before the final topless wall of Bauglir's immeasurable hall, 3535 whereunder looming awful waits the gigantic shadow of his gates.

NOTES

- 3249– Cf. the opening of the Lay, lines 5–10.
53
- 3267 Against this line is written the date
'Sep. 26 1930'. The previous date was 25 Sept. 1930 at line 3220.
- 3297 Tavros > Tauros B: see notes to lines 891, 904; 2246.
- 3303 Taur-na-Fuin > Taur-nu-Fuin B (a late change).
- 3401 Draugluin appears here in the A-text (see p. 258).
- 3414– Cf. lines 2258–9.
15
- 3419– The shift from thee to your and you is 23 intentional, and indicates that Huan now refers to both Beren and Lúthien.
- 3478 Against this line is written the date
'Sep. 27 1930'.

Commentary on Canto XI

The earliest version of the narrative of this Canto describes Tinúviel's sewing of Beren into the catskin of Oikeroi and teaching him some aspects of feline behaviour; she herself was not disguised. Very little is made of the journey to Angamandi, but the approach to the gates is described:

At length however they drew near to Angamandi, as indeed the rumblings and deep noises, and the sound of mighty hammerings of ten thousand smiths labouring unceasingly, declared to them. Nigh were the sad chambers where the thrall-Noldoli laboured bitterly under the Orcs and goblins of the hills, and here the gloom and darkness was great so that their hearts fell ... (Il. 31).

Synopses I and II have virtually nothing here beyond the bare event (p. 270). In its emended form Synopsis III comes near to the final story of the 'wolfhame' and the parting from Huan (p. 272); and this outline continues:

Thangorodrim towers above them. There are rumblings, steam and vapours burst from fissures in the rock. Ten thousand smiths are hammering - they pass the vaults where the thrall-Gnomes are labouring without rest. The gloom sinks into their hearts.

This is remarkably close to the passage cited above from the Tale of Tinúviel.

Synopsis IV (p. 273) adds no more, for after 'They prepare to go to Angband' it continues with events in Doriath and the embassy to Thingol from Celegorm, which at this stage my father was going to introduce before the Angband adventure, and in this outline virtually nothing is said of that.

There remains Synopsis V, whose outline for Canto '10' has been given on p. 273 as far as 'One morning early Beren steals away on Curufin's horse and reaches the eaves of Taur-na-Fuin', and it is here that Beren's solitary departure first enters. This outline continues, still under the heading 'Canto 10':

There he looks upon Thangorodrim and sings a song of farewell to earth and light, and to Lúthien. In the midst up come Lúthien and Huan! With the hound's aid she has followed him; and moreover from the Wizard's Isle Huan has brought a wolf-ham and a bat-coat. [Struck through at time of writing: Beren sets Lúthien upon the horse and they ride through Taur-na-Fuin.*] Beren sets Curufin's horse to gallop free and he speeds away. Now Beren takes the shape of werewolf and Tinúviel of bat. Then Huan bids farewell. And speaks. No hound can walk with werewolf – more peril should I be than help in Morgoth's land. Yet what ye shall see at Angband's gate I perchance too shall see, though my fate doth not lead to those doors. Darkened is all hope, and dimmed my eyes, yet perchance I see thy paths leading from that place once more. Then he vanishes. They make a grievous journey. Thangorodrim looms over them, in its smoky foothills.

This ends the outline for 'Canto 10' in Synopsis V.

There is a notable difference in the structure of the story in the Lay from that in The Silmarillion (pp. 178–9) : in the Lay Huan is absent (gone to the Wizard's Isle for the wolfcoat and batskin) when Lúthien finds Beren – she does not know where he has gone – but he comes up a little later; whereas in the prose account Huan and Lúthien came together, and they were clad in 'the ghastly wolf-hame of Draugluin and the bat-fell of Thuringwethil' – an apparition that filled Beren with dismay. The story in The Silmarillion is a reversion, at least in so far as Huan and Lúthien arrive together, to that of Synopsis V ('In the midst up come Lúthien and Huan', p. 283).

In the Lay the bat-wings are only said to be such as bear up Thû's messengers, and are not associated with a particular or chief messenger (Thuringwethil, 'messenger of Sauron').

But the prose version in other respects follows that of the Lay closely, with as before retention of phrases ('between the desert and the wood', 'Thrice now I curse my oath', 'fingured wings ... barbed at each joint's end', 'the bat wheeled and flittered above him'); and the speech of Huan is closely modelled on that in the Lay.

From Beren's words to the horse (3288-90)

get thee gone to Sirion's vale,
back as we came, past island pale where Thû once reigned

it is clear that as in The Silmarillion 'he rode northward again with all speed to the Pass of Sirion, and coming to the skirts of Taur-nu-Fuin he looked out across the waste of Anfauglith'. It is not said in the Lay how Lúthien and Huan came there, but in The Silmarillion 'clad in these dreadful garments' they 'ran through Taur-nu-Fuin, and all things fled before them'.

The Battle of Sudden Flame (lines 3256 ff.) has been described earlier in the Lay (lines 1678 ff.), but it has not been actually stated before that the northern plain was once green and grassy (3246-8), and became a desert after the 'rivers of fire ... upon the plain burst forth'.

With Beren's words to Curufin's horse (3295-7):

dream thee back in Valinor,
whence came of old thy mighty race

cf. The Silmarillion p. 119, where it is told that 'many of the sires' of the horses of the Noldor of Hithlum who rode on Ard-galen came from Valinor.

XII

In that vast shadow once of yore

Fingolfin stood: his shield he bore with field of heaven's blue and star of crystal shining pale afar. 3540

In overmastering wrath and hate desperate he smote upon that gate, the Gnomish king, there standing lone, while endless fortresses of stone 3545 engulfed the thin clear ringing keen of silver horn on baldric green.

His hopeless challenge dauntless cried Fingolfin there: 'Come, open wide, dark king, your ghastly brazen doors! 3550

Come forth, whom earth and heaven abhors!
Come forth, O monstrous craven lord,
and fight with thine own hand and sword, thou wielder of hosts of banded thralls, thou tyrant leaguered with strong walls, 3555
thou foe of Gods and elvish race!
I wait thee here. Come! Show thy face!'

Then Morgoth came. For the last time in those great wars he dared to climb from subterranean throne profound, 3560 the rumour of his feet a sound of rumbling earthquake underground.

Black-armoured, towering, iron-crowned he issued forth; his mighty shield a vast unblazoned sable field 3565 with shadow like a thundercloud;
and o'er the gleaming king it bowed,
as huge aloft like mace he hurled that hammer of the underworld,

Grond. Clanging to ground it tumbled down like a thunder-bolt, and crumbled the rocks beneath it; smoke up-started, a pit yawned, and a fire darted. 3570

Fingolfin like a shooting light beneath a cloud, a stab of white, 3575 sprang then aside, and Ringil drew like ice that gleameth cold and blue, his sword devised of elvish skill to pierce the flesh with deadly chill.

With seven wounds it rent his foe, 3580
and seven mighty cries of woe rang in the mountains, and the earth quook, and Angband's trembling armies shook.

Yet Orcs would after laughing tell of the duel at the gates of hell; 3585 though elvish song thereof was made ere this but one – when sad was laid the mighty king in barrow high,
and Thorndor, Eagle of the sky,
the dreadful tidings brought and told 3590 to mourning Elfinesse of old.

Thrice was Fingolfin with great blows to his knees beaten, thrice he rose still leaping up beneath the cloud aloft to hold star-shining, proud, 3595 his stricken shield, his sundered helm, that dark nor might could overwhelm till all the earth was burst and rent in pits about him. He was spent.

His feet stumbled. He fell to wreck 3600 upon the ground, and on his neck a foot like rooted hills was set,

and he was crushed – not conquered yet;
one last despairing stroke he gave:
the mighty foot pale Ringil clave 3605 about the heel, and black the blood gushed as from smoking fount in flood.

Halt goes for ever from that stroke great Morgoth; but the king he broke, and would have hewn and mangled thrown 3610 to wolves devouring. Lo! from throne that Manwë bade him build on high,

on peak unscaled beneath the sky,
Morgoth to watch, now down there swooped Thorndor the King of Eagles, stooped, 3615 and rending beak of gold he smote in Bauglir's face, then up did float on pinions thirty fathoms wide bearing away, though loud they cried, the mighty corse, the Elven-king; 3620 and where the mountains make a ring far to the south about that plain where after Gondolin did reign, embattled city, at great height upon a dizzy snowcap white 3625 in mounded cairn the mighty dead he laid upon the mountain's head.

Never Orc nor demon after dared that pass to climb, o'er which there stared Fingolfin's high and holy tomb, 3630 till Gondolin's appointed doom.

Thus Bauglir earned the furrowed scar that his dark countenance doth mar, and thus his limping gait he gained;
but afterward profound he reigned 3635 darkling upon his hidden throne;
and thunderous paced his halls of stone, slow building there his vast design the world in thralldom to confine.

Wielder of armies, lord of woe, 3640
no rest now gave he slave or foe;
his watch and ward he thrice increased, his spies were sent from West to East and tidings brought from all the North, who fought, who fell; who ventured forth, 3645 who wrought in secret; who had hoard;
if maid were fair or proud were lord;
well nigh all things he knew, all hearts well nigh enmeshed in evil arts.

Doriath only, beyond the veil 3650 woven by Melian, no assail could hurt or enter; only rumour dim of things there passing came to him.

A rumour loud and tidings clear of other movements far and near 3655
among his foes, and threat of war from the seven sons of Fëanor, from Nargothrond, from Fingon still gathering his armies under hill and under tree in Hithlum's shade, 3660 these daily came. He grew afraid amidst his power once more; renown of Beren vexed his ears, and down the aisé forests there was heard great Huan baying.

Then came word	3665
most passing strange of Lúthien wild-wandering by wood and glen,
and Thingol's purpose long he weighed,
and wondered, thinking of that maid
so fair, so frail. A captain dire,	3670
Boldog, he sent with sword and fire to Doriath's march; but battle fell sudden upon him: news to tell never one returned of Boldog's host,
and Thingol humbled Morgoth's boast.	3675
Then his heart with doubt and wrath was burned:
new tidings of dismay he learned, how Thû was o'erthrown and his strong isle broken and plundered, how with guile his foes now guile beset; and spies	3680
he feared, till each Orc to his eyes was half suspect. Still ever down the aisé forests came renown of Huan baying, hound of war
that Gods unleashed in Valinor.	3685

Then Morgoth of Huan's fate bethought long-rumoured, and in dark he wrought.
Fierce hunger-haunted packs he had that in wolvis form and flesh were clad,
but demon spirits dire did hold;	3690 and ever wild their voices rolled in cave and mountain where they housed and endless snarling echoes roused.

From these a whelp he chose and fed with his own hand on bodies dead, 3695 on fairest flesh of Elves and Men, till huge he grew and in his den no more could creep, but by the chair of Morgoth's self would lie and glare, nor suffer Balrog, Orc, nor beast 3700 to touch him. Many a ghastly feast he held beneath that awful throne, rending flesh and gnawing bone.
There deep enchantment on him fell,
the anguish and the power of hell; 3705 more great and terrible he became with fire-red eyes and jaws aflame, with breath like vapours of the grave,
than any beast of wood or cave, than any beast of earth or hell 3710 that ever in any time befell, surpassing all his race and kin,
the ghastly tribe of Draugluin.

Him Carcharoth, the Red Maw, name the songs of Elves. Not yet he came 3715 disastrous, ravening, from the gates of Angband. There he sleepless waits; where those great portals threatening loom his red eyes smoulder in the gloom, his teeth are bare, his jaws are wide; 3720
and none may walk, nor creep, nor glide, nor thrust with power his menace past to enter Morgoth's dungeon vast.

Now, lo! before his watchful eyes a slinking shape he far describes 3725 that crawls into the frowning plain and halts at gaze, then on again comes stalking near, a wolvis shape haggard, wayworn, with jaws agape; and o'er it batlike in wide rings 3730
a reeling shadow slowly wings.
Such shapes there oft were seen to roam,
this land their native haunt and home;
and yet his mood with strange unease is filled, and boding thoughts him seize. 3735

'What grievous terror, what dread guard hath Morgoth set to wait, and barred his doors against all entering feet?
Long ways we have come at last to meet the very maw of death that opes 3740 between us and our quest! Yet hopes we never had. No turning back!' Thus Beren speaks, as in his track he halts and sees with werewolf eyes afar the horror that there lies. 3745 Then onward desperate he passed, skirting the black pits yawning vast,
where King Fingolfin ruinous fell alone before the gates of hell.

Before those gates alone they stood, 3750 while Carcharoth in doubtful mood glowered upon them, and snarling spoke, and echoes in the arches woke:

'Hail! Draugluin, my kindred's lord!
'Tis very long since hitherward 3755 thou camest. Yea, 'tis passing strange to see thee now: a grievous change is on thee, lord, who once so dire, so dauntless, and as fleet as fire, ran over wild and waste, but now 3760
with weariness must bend and bow!
'Tis hard to find the struggling breath when Huan's teeth as sharp as death have rent the throat? What fortune rare brings thee back living here to fare - 3765 if Draugluin thou art? Come near!
I would know more, and see thee clear.'

'Who art thou, hungry upstart whelp, to bar my ways whom thou shouldst help?
I fare with hasty tidings new 3770 to Morgoth from forest-haunting Thû.
Aside! for I must in; or go and swift my coming tell below!'

Then up that doorward slowly stood, eyes shining grim with evil mood, 3775 uneasy growling: 'Draugluin, if such thou be, now enter in!
But what is this that crawls beside,
slinking as if 'twould neath thee hide?
Though wingéd creatures to and fro 3780 unnumbered pass here, all I know.
I know not this. Stay, vampire, stay!
I like not thy kin nor thee. Come, say what sneaking errand thee doth bring, thou wingéd vermin, to the king! 3785 Small matter, I doubt not, if thou stay or enter, or if in my play

I crush thee like a fly on wall, or bite thy wings and let thee crawl.'

Huge-stalking, noisome, close he came. 3790
In Beren's eyes there gleamed a flame;
the hair upon his neck uprose.

Nought may the fragrance fair enclose, the odour of immortal flowers in everlasting spring neath showers 3795 that glitter silver in the grass in Valinor. Where'er did pass Tinúviel, such air there went.

From that foul devil-sharpened scent its sudden sweetness no disguise 3800 enchanted dark to cheat the eyes could keep, if near those nostrils drew snuffling in doubt. This Beren knew upon the brink of hell prepared for battle and death. There threatening stared 3805 those dreadful shapes, in hatred both, false Draugluin and Carcharoth when, lo! a marvel to behold:

some power, descended from of old, from race divine beyond the West, 3810
sudden Tinúviel possessed like inner fire. The vampire dark she flung aside, and like a lark cleaving through night to dawn she sprang, while sheer, heart-piercing silver, rang 3815

her voice, as those long trumpets keen thrilling, unbearable, unseen in the cold aisles of morn. Her cloak by white hands woven, like a smoke, like all-bewildering, all-enthraling, 3820 all-enfolding evening, falling from lifted arms, as forth she stepped, across those awful eyes she swept,
a shadow and a mist of dreams wherein entangled starlight gleams. 3825

‘Sleep, O unhappy, tortured thrall!
Thou weebegotten, fail and fall down, down from anguish, hatred, pain, from lust, from hunger, bond and chain, to that oblivion, dark and deep, 3830
the well, the lightless pit of sleep!
For one brief hour escape the net,
the dreadful doom of life forget!’

His eyes were quenched, his limbs were loosed;
he fell like running steer that noosed 3835 and tripped goes crashing to the ground.
Deathlike, moveless, without a sound outstretched he lay, as lightning stroke had felled a huge o’ershadowing oak.

NOTES

- 3554 banded A, B; > branded B, but I think that the r was written in by somebody else.
- 3589 Thorndor emended to Thorondor in B, but I think that this was a late correction.
- 3606 pinned it to earth A, B; about the heel apparently a late emendation to B.
- 3615 Thorndor later emended to Thorondor in B, see 3589.
- 3623 after > secret B, a late emendation when Gondolin's foundation had been made much earlier.
- 3638–
9 A: nor ever again to war came forth until the last battle of the North, but builded slow his mighty thought of pride and lust unfathomed wrought.
- 3650 Against this line is written the date 'Sep. 28'. The previous date was 27 Sept. 1930 against line 3478.
- 3658 Finweg A, B, emended to Fingon B, as at lines 1647, 1654.
- 3712–
13 This couplet not in A, as originally written.
- 3714 A (as originally written):
Him Carcharos, the Knife-fang, name Carcharos then > Carcharas, and then > Carcharoth (see notes to lines 3751, 3807). In the margin of A is written Red

Maw, and Caras with another, illegible, word beginning Car-; also Gargaroth; and Fearphantom Draugluin is his name. This may mean that my father was thinking of using the name Draugluin for the Wolf of Angband, though Draugluin had by now appeared in the A-text (3401) for the great wolf of the Wizard's Isle.

- 3751 Carcharas A, not emended to Carcharoth (see note to 3714).
- 3790 Against this line is written the date
 'Sep. 30 1930'. The previous date was 28 Sept. 1930 against line 3650.
- 3807 Carcharoth A (rhyming with both);
 see notes to 3714, 3751.

Commentary on Canto XII

The greater part of this Canto is retrospective: beginning with the death of Fingolfin in combat with Morgoth, it passes to Morgoth's doubts and fears and his rearing of Carcharoth. By this time (September 1930) a large part, at any rate, of the prose 'Silmarillion' developed out of the 'Sketch of the Mythology' had been written, as I hope to demonstrate later, and it seems certain that the story of Fingolfin's duel with Morgoth as it appears in this Canto followed the prose version, though we meet it here for the first time (together with the names Grond, the Hammer of the Underworld, and Ringil, Fingolfin's sword). The text in The Silmarillion (pp. 153-4) was largely based on the Lay, which it follows in the structure of the account and from which derive many phrases;* but independent traces of the 'prose tradition' are also present. The account in the poem gives no indication of when the duel took place, or of what led Fingolfin to challenge Morgoth. For the much earlier mention of Fingolfin's death (now very obscure, but certainly quite differently conceived) see pp. 146-7.

The further mention in this Canto of Boldog's raid (lines 3665-75) will be discussed at the end of the poem (pp. 310-13).

Turning to the 'foreground' narrative, a passage in Synopsis III already given (pp. 270-1) bears on the content of Canto XII: it was bracketed and marked 'Later'.

Morgoth hearing of the breaking of the Wizard's Tower sends out an army of Orcs; finding the wolves are slain with throats. he thinks it is Huan and fashions a vast wolf - Carcharas - mightiest of all wolves to guard his door.

Synopsis III continues from the point reached on p. 283:

The hideous gates of Angband. There lay Carcharoth knifefang. He gets slowly to his feet and bars the gate. 'Growl not O Wolf for I go to seek Morgoth with news of Thû.' He approached to snuff the air of her, for faint suspicion moved in his wicked heart, and he fell into slumber.

The interpretation of the wolf's name as 'Knife-fang' goes back to the Tale of Tinúviel and survived into the A-text of the Lay (see note to line 3714), but was replaced in B by the translation 'Red Maw'. The words 'red maw' are used of Karkaras in the Tale, but not as his name (II. 34).

The idea of Carcharoth's approaching Lúthien 'to snuff the air of her' is also derived, in these same words, from the Tale (II. 31).

Synopsis IV does not here concern us (see p. 283); Synopsis V, after the point reached on p. 283, now has a heading 'II', and is clearly the basis for the story in Canto XII of the Lay:

[Added in pencil: Battle of Morgoth and Fingolfin.]

Morgoth hears of the ruin of Thû's castle. His mind is filled with misgiving and anger. The gates of Angband strengthened; because of the rumour of Huan he [struck out at time of writing: fashions the greatest] chooses the fiercest wolf from all the whelps of his packs, and feeds him on flesh of Men and Elves, and enchants him so that he becomes the most great and terrible of all beasts that ever have been – Carcharos.

Beren and Lúthien approach. [Added in pencil: the pitted plain of Fingolfin's fight.] The enchanting of Carcharos.

XIII

Into the vast and echoing gloom, 3840 more dread than many-tunnelled tomb in labyrinthine pyramid

where everlasting death is hid, down awful corridors that wind down to a menace dark enshrined; 3845 down to the mountain's roots profound, devoured, tormented, bored and ground by seething vermin spawned of stone;
down to the depths they went alone.

The arch behind of twilit shade 3850
they saw recede and dwindling fade;
the thunderous forges' rumour grew,
a burning wind there roaring blew foul vapours up from gaping holes.

Huge shapes there stood like carven trolls 3855 enormous hewn of blasted rock to forms that mortal likeness mock;

monstrous and menacing, entombed, at every turn they silent loomed in fitful glares that leaped and died. 3860

There hammers clanged, and tongues there cried with sound like smitten stone; there wailed faint from far under, called and failed amid the iron clink of chain voices of captives put to pain. 3865

Loud rose a din of laughter hoarse, self-loathing yet without remorse;
loud came a singing harsh and fierce like swords of terror souls to pierce.

Red was the glare through open doors 3870 of firelight mirrored on brazen floors, and up the arches towering clomb to glooms unguessed, to vaulted dome swathed in wavering smokes and steams stabbed with flickering lightning-gleams. 3875

To Morgoth's hall, where dreadful feast he held, and drank the blood of beast and lives of Men, they stumbling came:
their eyes were dazed with smoke and flame.

The pillars, reared like monstrous shores 3880 to bear earth's overwhelming floors, were devil-carven, shaped with skill such as unholy dreams doth fill:

they towered like trees into the air, whose trunks are rooted in despair, 3885 whose shade is death, whose fruit is bane, whose boughs like serpents writhe in pain.

Beneath them ranged with spear and sword stood Morgoth's sable-armoured horde:

the fire on blade and boss of shield 3890 was red as blood on stricken field.

Beneath a monstrous column loomed the throne of Morgoth, and the doomed and dying gasped upon the floor:

his hideous footstool, rape of war. 3895

About him sat his awful thanes, the Balrog-lords with fiery manes, redhanded, mouthed with fangs of steel;
devouring wolves were crouched at heel.

And o'er the host of hell there shone 3900 with a cold radiance, clear and wan, the Silmarils, the gems of fate, emprisoned in the crown of hate.

Lo! through the grinning portals dread sudden a shadow swooped and fled;

and Beren gasped – he lay alone, 3905 with crawling belly on the stone:

a form bat-wingéd, silent, flew where the huge pillared branches grew, amid the smokes and mounting steams. 3910

And as on the margin of dark dreams a dim-felt shadow unseen grows to cloud of vast unease, and woes foreboded, nameless, roll like doom upon the soul, so in that gloom 3915 the voices fell, and laughter died slow to silence many-eyed.

A nameless doubt, a shapeless fear, had entered in their caverns drear, and grew, and towered above them cowed, 3920 hearing in heart the trumpets loud of gods forgotten. Morgoth spoke, and thunderous the silence broke:
'Shadow, descend! And do not think to cheat mine eyes! In vain to shrink 3925 from thy Lord's gaze, or seek to hide.
My will by none may be defied.
Hope nor escape doth here await those that unbidden pass my gate.
Descend! ere anger blast thy wing, 3930
thou foolish, frail, bat-shapen thing, and yet not bat within! Come down!'

Slow-wheeling o'er his iron crown, reluctantly, shivering and small, Beren there saw the shadow fall, 3935 and droop before the hideous throne, a weak and trembling thing, alone.
And as thereon great Morgoth bent his darkling gaze, he shuddering went, belly to earth, the cold sweat dank 3940 upon his fell, and crawling shrank beneath the darkness of that seat, beneath the shadow of those feet.

Tinúviel spake, a shrill, thin, sound piercing those silences profound: 3945
'A lawful errand here me brought;
from Thû's dark mansions have I sought, from Taur-na-Fuin's shade I fare to stand before thy mighty chair!'

‘Thy name, thou shrieking waif, thy name! 3950 Tidings enough from Thû there came but short while since. What would he now?
Why send such messenger as thou?’

‘Thuringwethil I am, who cast a shadow o’er the face aghast of the sallow moon in the doomed land of shivering Beleriand.’

‘Liar art thou, who shalt not weave deceit before mine eyes. Now leave thy form and raiment false, and stand revealed, and delivered to my hand!’

There came a slow and shuddering change:
the batlike raiment dark and strange was loosed, and slowly shrank and fell quivering. She stood revealed in hell.

About her slender shoulders hung her shadowy hair, and round her clung her garment dark, where glimmered pale the starlight caught in magic veil.

Dim dreams and faint oblivious sleep	3970
fell softly thence, in dungeons deep an odour stole of elven-flowers from elven-dells where silver showers drip softly through the evening air;

and round there crawled with greedy stare 3975

dark shapes of snuffling hunger dread.

With arms upraised and drooping head then softly she began to sing
a theme of sleep and slumbering, wandering, woven with deeper spell 3980
than songs wherewith in ancient dell Melian did once the twilight fill, profound, and fathomless, and still.

The fires of Angband flared and died, smouldered into darkness; through the wide 3985 and hollow halls there rolled unfurled the shadows of the underworld.
All movement stayed, and all sound ceased, save vaporous breath of Orc and beast.
One fire in darkness still abode: 3990
the lidless eyes of Morgoth glowed; one sound the breathing silence broke:
the mirthless voice of Morgoth spoke.

‘So Lúthien, so Lúthien, a liar like all Elves and Men! 3995
Yet welcome, welcome, to my hall!
I have a use for every thrall.
What news of Thingol in his hole shy lurking like a timid vole?
What folly fresh is in his mind, 4000 who cannot keep his offspring blind from straying thus? or can devise no better counsel for his spies?’

She wavered, and she stayed her song.
‘The road,’ she said, ‘was wild and long, 4005 but Thingol sent me not, nor knows what way his rebellious daughter goes.
Yet every road and path will lead Northward at last, and here of need
I trembling come with humble brow, 4010 and here before thy throne I bow;
for Lúthien hath many arts
for solace sweet of kingly hearts.’

‘And here of need thou shalt remain now, Lúthien, in joy or pain– 4015 or pain, the fitting doom for all,

for rebel, thief, and upstart thrall.
Why should ye not in our fate share of woe and travail? Or should I spare to slender limb and body frail 4020

breaking torment? Of what avail here dost thou deem thy babbling song and foolish laughter? Minstrels strong are at my call. Yet I will give a respite brief, a while to live, 4025 a little while, though purchased dear, to Lúthien the fair and clear,
a pretty toy for idle hour.
In slothful gardens many a flower like thee the amorous gods are used 4030
honey-sweet to kiss, and cast then bruised, their fragrance loosing, under feet.
But here we seldom find such sweet amid our labours long and hard, from godlike idleness debarred. 4035
And who would not taste the honey-sweet lying to lips, or crush with feet the soft cool tissue of pale flowers, easing like gods the dragging hours?
A! curse the Gods! O hunger dire, 4040
O blinding thirst's unending fire!
One moment shall ye cease, and slake your sting with morsel I here take!'

In his eyes the fire to flame was fanned, and forth he stretched his brazen hand. 4045 Lúthien as shadow shrank aside.
'Not thus, O king! Not thus!' she cried,
'do great lords hark to humble boon!
For every minstrel hath his tune;
and some are strong and some are soft, 4050
and each would bear his song aloft, and each a little while be heard,

though rude the note, and light the word.
But Lúthien hath cunning arts
for solace sweet of kingly hearts. 4055
Now hearken!' And her wings she caught then deftly up, and swift as thought slipped from his grasp, and wheeling round, fluttering before his eyes, she wound a mazy-wingéd dance, and sped 4060
about his iron-crownéd head.
Suddenly her song began anew;
and soft came dropping like a dew down from on high in that domed hall her voice bewildering, magical, 4065 and grew to silver-murmuring streams pale falling in dark pools in dreams.

She let her flying raiment sweep, enmeshed with woven spells of sleep,
as round the dark void she ranged and reeled. 4070 From wall to wall she turned and wheeled in dance such as never Elf nor fay
before devised, nor since that day;
than swallow swifter, than flittermouse in dying light round darkened house 4075 more silken-soft, more strange and fair than sylphine maidens of the Air whose wings in Varda's heavenly hall
in rhythmic movement beat and fall.

Down crumpled Orc, and Balrog proud; 4080 all eyes were quenched, all heads were bowed;
the fires of heart and maw were stilled,

and ever like a bird she thrilled above a lightless world forlorn in ecstasy enchanted borne. 4085

All eyes were quenched, save those that glared in Morgoth's lowering brows, and stared in slowly wandering wonder round, and slow were in enchantment bound.
Their will wavered, and their fire failed, 4090 and as beneath his brows they paled, the Silmarils like stars were kindled that in the reek of Earth had dwindled escaping upwards clear to shine, glistening marvellous in heaven's mine. 4095

Then flaring suddenly they fell, down, down upon the floors of hell.
The dark and mighty head was bowed;
like mountain-top beneath a cloud the shoulders foundered, the vast form 4100 crashed, as in overwhelming storm huge cliffs in ruin slide and fall;
and prone lay Morgoth in his hall.
His crown there rolled upon the ground, a wheel of thunder; then all sound 4105 died, and a silence grew as deep as were the heart of Earth asleep.

Beneath the vast and empty throne
the adders lay like twisted stone, the wolves like corpses foul were strewn; 4110 and there lay Beren deep in swoon:
no thought, no dream nor shadow blind moved in the darkness of his mind.

‘Come forth, come forth! The hour hath knelled, and Angband’s mighty lord is felled! 4115

Awake, awake! For we two meet alone before the awful seat.’

This voice came down into the deep where he lay drowned in wells of sleep;
a hand flower-soft and flower-cool 4120 passed o’er his face, and the still pool of slumber quivered. Up then leaped his mind to waking; forth he crept.

The wolvish fell he flung aside and sprang unto his feet, and wide 4125 staring amid the soundless gloom he gasped as one living shut in tomb.

There to his side he felt her shrink, felt Lúthien now shivering sink, her strength and magic dimmed and spent, 4130 and swift his arms about her went.

Before his feet he saw amazed the gems of Fëanor, that blazed with white fire glistening in the crown of Morgoth’s might now fallen down. 4135

To move that helm of iron vast no strength he found, and thence aghast he strove with fingers mad to wrest the guerdon of their hopeless quest, till in his heart there fell the thought 4140 of that cold morn whereon he fought with Curufin; then from his belt the sheathless knife he drew, and knelt, and tried its hard edge, bitter-cold, o'er which in Nogrod songs had rolled 4145 of dwarvish armourers singing slow to hammer-music long ago.

Iron as tender wood it clove and mail as woof of loom it rove.
The claws of iron that held the gem, 4150
it bit them through and sundered them;
a Silmaril he clasped and held,
and the pure radiance slowly welled red glowing through the clenching flesh.
Again he stooped and strove afresh 4155
one more of the holy jewels three that Fëanor wrought of yore to free.
But round those fires was woven fate:
not yet should they leave the halls of hate.
The dwarvish steel of cunning blade 4160
by treacherous smiths of Nogrod made snapped; then ringing sharp and clear in twain it sprang, and like a spear or errant shaft the brow it grazed of Morgoth's sleeping head, and dazed 4165 their hearts with fear. For Morgoth groaned with voice entombed, like wind that moaned in hollow caverns penned and bound.
There came a breath; a gasping sound moved through the halls, as Orc and beast 4170 turned in their dreams of hideous feast;
in sleep uneasy Balrogs stirred,
and far above was faintly heard an echo that in tunnels rolled, a wolvish howling long and cold. 4175

NOTES

- 3840 At the beginning of the Canto is written the date 'Oct. 1 1930'. The previous date was 30 Sept. 1930 at line 3790.
- 386 With this line the B typescript comes to an end, and the text continues to the end in fine manuscript.
- 3881 This line is dated 'Sept. 14 1931'. The previous date was 1 Oct. 1930 at line 3840.
- 3887 This line is dated 'Sept. 15' (1931).
- 3947 Late change in B: from Sauron's mansions have I sought. See p. 232, note to lines 2064-6.
- 3951 Late change in B: Tidings enough from Sauron came.
- 3954 In the margin of B is written against Thuringwethil, at the time of the writing out of the text, 'sc. she of hidden shadow'.
- 3957 Beleriand A and B (i.e. not Broseliand emended).
- 3962 This line is dated 'Sep. 16 1931'.
- 3969 magic > elvish in B, but this is doubtless a late change, when my father no longer used this once favourite word.

- 4029 Against this line is written the date 'Sep. 14', duplicating that given to line 3881.
- 4045 Against this line is written the date 'Sep. 16', duplicating that given to line 3962.
- 4085 After this line is written the last date in the A manuscript, 'Sept. 17 1931'.
- 4092– These lines were written in the 3 margin of B, but the original lines:
the Silmarils were lit like stars that fume of Earth upreiking mars were not struck out.
- 4163– A: in twain it sprang; and quaking fear
6 fell on their hearts, for Morgoth groaned

Commentary on Canto XIII

There is not much to be learnt from the Synopses concerning this part of the narrative, but the Angband scene was never greatly changed from its original form in the Tale of Tinúviel (ll. 31 ff.). Synopsis I is at the end reduced to mere headings, II has given out, and IV does not deal with the entry into Angband. III, given on pp. 293–4 as far as the enchantment of Carcharoth, continues:

After endless wanderings in corridors they stumble into the presence of Morgoth. Morgoth speaks. 'Who art thou that flittest about my halls as a bat, but art not a bat? Thou dost not belong here, nor wert thou summoned. Who has ever come here unsummoned? None!' 'But I was summoned. I am Lúthien daughter of Thingol.' Then Morgoth laughed, but he was moved with suspicion, and said that her accursed race would get no soft words or favour in Angband. What could she do to give him pleasure, and save herself from the lowest dungeons? He reached out his mighty brazen hand but she shrank away. He is angry but she offers to dance.

[The remainder of the outline is in pencil and in places indecipherable:] She lets fall her bat-garb. Her hair falls about. The lights of Angband die. Impenetrable dark falls: only the eyes of Morgoth and the faint glimmer of Tinúviel Her fragrance causes all to draw near greedily. Tinúviel flies [?in at] door leaving Beren struck with horror

Here this outline ends. Morgoth's words 'Who art thou that flittest about my halls as a bat' occur also in the Tale of Tinúviel (II. 32) – this outline several times adopts directly the wording of the Tale, see pp. 283, 294. This is a curious point, for in the Tale Tinúviel was not attired in a bat-skin, whereas in Synopsis III she was. It is conceivable that Melko's words actually gave rise to this element in the story.

In the Tale Tinúviel lied to Melko, saying that Tinwelint her father had driven her out, and in reply he said that she need not hope for 'soft words' – this too is a phrase that recurs in Synopsis III. But the remainder of this outline does not relate closely to the Tale.

Synopsis V is here very brief. After 'the enchanting of Carcharos' (p. 294) it has only (still under the heading '11'):

The cozening of Morgoth and the rape of the Silmaril.

The dwarvish knife of Curufin breaks.

It is clear that the concluding passage of Synopsis III, given above, was a direct precursor of Canto XIII; but some elements – and actual wording – in the scene go back to the Tale without being mentioned in the Synopsis. Lúthien's words 'his rebellious daughter' (4007) seem to echo 'he is an overbearing Elf and I give not my love at his command' (II. 32); there is a clear relation between the words of the Tale (ibid.):

Then did Tinúviel begin such a dance as neither she nor other sprite or fay or elf danced ever before or has done since

and lines 4072–3

in dance such as never Elf nor fay
before devised, nor since that day;

and with 'the adders lay like twisted stone' (4109) cf. 'Beneath his chair the adders lay like stones.' It is interesting to see the idea of the shard of the knife-blade striking Morgoth's brow (in The Silmarillion his cheek) emerging in the composition of this Canto; as first written (see note to lines 4163–6) it seems to have been the sound of the knife snapping that disturbed the sleepers, as it was expressly in the Tale (II. 33). With the 'treacherous smiths of Nogrod' (4161) who made Curufin's knife cf. the passage in The Children of Húrin concerning the bearded Dwarves of troth unmindful who made the knife of Flinding that slipped from its sheath (p. 44, lines 1142 ff.): that was made by the Dwarves of Belegost, and like Curufin's

[its] edge would eat through iron noiseless
as a clod of clay is cleft by the share.

The account in The Silmarillion (pp. 180–1) is clearly based on Canto XIII, from which it derives many features, though it is reduced, notably by compressing the two episodes of Lúthien singing (3977 ff., 4062 ff.) into one; and the prose here owes less to the verses than in other places.

Lúthien's naming herself Thuringwethil to Morgoth (line 3954) is notable. In The Silmarillion (p. 178) the bat-fell which Huan brought from Tol-in-Gaurhoth was that of Thuringwethil: 'she was the messenger of Sauron, and was wont to fly in vampire's form to Angband'; whereas in the Lay (lines 3402 ff.), as I have noticed (p. 284), 'the bat-wings are only said to be such as bear up Thû's messengers, and are not associated with a particular or chief messenger'. It seems possible that in the Lay Lúthien devised this name ('she of hidden shadow') as a riddling description of herself, and that this led to the conception of the bat-messenger from the Wizard's Isle to Angband named Thuringwethil; but there is no proof of this.

With the sylphine maidens of the Air whose wings in Varda's heavenly hall

in rhythmic movement beat and fall

(4077–9)

cf. the tale of The Coming of the Valar and the Building of Valinor (I. 65–6), where it is said that with Manwë and Varda there entered the world 'many of those lesser Vali who loved them and had played nigh them and attuned their music to theirs, and these are the Mánir and the Súruli, the sylphs of the airs and of the winds'.

Up through the dark and echoing gloom as ghosts from many-tunnelled tomb, up from the mountains' roots profound and the vast menace underground, their limbs aquake with deadly fear, 4180 terror in eyes, and dread in ear, together fled they, by the beat affrighted of their flying feet.

At last before them far away
they saw the glimmering wraith of day, 4185
the mighty archway of the gate - and there a horror new did wait.
Upon the threshold, watchful, dire,
his eyes new-kindled with dull fire, towered Carcharoth, a bidding doom: 4190 his jaws were gaping like a tomb, his teeth were bare, his tongue aflame;
aroused he watched that no one came,
no flitting shade nor hunted shape, seeking from Angband to escape. 4195 Now past that guard what guile or might could thrust from death into the light?

He heard afar their hurrying feet,
he snuffed an odour strange and sweet;
he smelled their coming long before 4200
they marked the waiting threat at door.
His limbs he stretched and shook off sleep, then stood at gaze. With sudden leap upon them as they sped he sprang, and his howling in the arches rang. 4205

Too swift for thought his onset came,
too swift for any spell to tame;
and Beren desperate then aside thrust Lúthien, and forth did stride unarmed, defenceless to defend 4210
Tinúviel until the end.
With left he caught at hairy throat, with right hand at the eyes he smote - his right, from which the radiance welled of the holy Silmaril he held. 4215
As gleam of swords in fire there flashed the fangs of Carcharoth, and crashed together like a trap, that tore the hand about the wrist, and shore through brittle bone and sinew nesh, 4220 devouring the frail mortal flesh; and in that cruel mouth unclean engulfed the jewel's holy sheen.

The Unwritten Cantos

There was virtually no change in the narrative from the Tale to the Lay in the opening passage of Canto XIV, but the account in The Silmarillion differs, in that there Beren did not strike at the eyes of the wolf with his right hand holding the Silmaril, but held the jewel up before Carcharoth to daunt him. My father intended to alter the Lay here, as is seen from a marginal direction to introduce the element of 'daunting'.

The Lay of Leithian ends here, in both the A and B texts, and also in the pages of rough draft, but an isolated sheet found elsewhere gives a few further lines, together with variants, in the first stage of composition:

Against the wall then Beren reeled but still with his left he sought to shield fair Lúthien, who cried aloud to see his pain, and down she bowed in anguish sinking to the ground.

There is also a short passage, found on a separate sheet at the end of the B-text, which is headed 'a piece from the end of the poem':

Where the forest-stream went through the wood,
and silent all the stems there stood of tall trees, moveless, hanging dark with mottled shadows on their bark above the green and gleaming 5 river,
there came through leaves a sudden shiver,
a windy whisper through the still cool silences; and down the hill, as faint as a deep sleeper's breath, an echo came as cold as death: 10
'Long are the paths, of shadow made where no foot's print is ever laid, over the hills, across the seas!
Far, far away are the Lands of Ease, but the Land of the Lost is further 15 yet,

where the Dead wait, while ye forget.
No moon is there, no voice, no sound of beating heart; a sigh profound once in each age as each age dies alone is heard. Far, far it lies, 20 the Land of Waiting where the Dead sit, in their thought's shadow, by no moon lit.

With the last lines compare the passage at the end of the tale of Beren and Lúthien in The Silmarillion (p. 186):

But Lúthien came to the halls of Mandos, which are the appointed places of the Eldalië, beyond the mansions of the West upon the confines of the world. There those that wait sit in the shadow of their thought.

There is nothing else, and I do not think that there ever was anything else. All my father's later work on the poem was devoted to the revision of what was already in existence; and the Lay of Leithian ends here.

Of the five synopses that have been given in sections in previous pages, only the fifth bears on the escape of Beren and Lúthien from Angband. This outline was last quoted on p. 305 ('the dwarvish knife of Curufin breaks'). It continues:

Beren and Lúthien flee in fear. Arousing of Carcharos. Beren's hand is bitten off in which he holds the Silmaril. Madness of Carcharos. Angband awakes. Flight of Beren and Lúthien towards the waters of Sirion. Canto i.e. Canto 11, see [p. 305] ends as they hear the pursuing wolves behind. Wrapped in Lúthien's cloak they flit beneath the stars.

Thus the rescue of Beren and Lúthien by Thorondor and his vassals was not yet present, and the story was still in this respect unchanged from the Tale of Tinúviel (II. 34); cf. especially:

Tinúviel wrapped part of her dark mantle about Beren, and so for a while flitting by dusk and dark amid the hills they were seen by none.

The first record of the changed story of the escape from Angband is found on an isolated slip, written hastily in pencil and very difficult to decipher:

Carcharoth goes mad and drives all [?orcs] before him like a wind. The sound of his awful howling causes rocks to split and fall. There is an earthquake underground. Morgoth's wrath on waking. The gateway [?falls] in and hell is blocked, and great fires and smokes burst from Thangorodrim. Thunder and lightning. Beren lies dying before the gate. Tinúviel's song as she kisses his hand and prepares to die. Thorondor comes down and bears them amid the lightning that [?stabs] at them like spears and a hail of arrows from the battlements. They pass above Gondolin and Lúthien sees the white city far below, [?gleaming] like a lily in the valley. Thorondor sets her down in Brethil.

This is very close in narrative structure to the story in The Silmarillion (p. 182), with the earthquake, fire and smoke from Thangorodrim, Beren's lying near death at the Gate, Lúthien's kissing his hand (staunching the wound), the descent of Thorondor, and the passage of the eagle(s) over Gondolin. This last shows that this brief outline is relatively late, since Gondolin was already in existence before the Battle of Unnumbered Tears (II. 208). But in this text they are set down in Brethil (a name that does not appear in the works until several years later); in The Silmarillion they are set down 'upon the borders of Doriath', in 'that same dell whence Beren had stolen in despair and left Lúthien asleep'.

– On the reference to Gondolin as 'a lily in the valley' see I. 172.

Synopsis V has more to tell subsequently of the wanderings of Beren and Lúthien before they returned to Doriath, but I now set out the remaining materials in their entirety before commenting on them. First it is convenient to cite the end of Synopsis II, which has been given already (p. 270):

Celegorm's embassy to Thingol so that Thingol knows or thinks he knows Beren dead and Lúthien in Nargothrond.

Why Celegorm and Curufin hated by Thingol...
The loss of Dairon.

Synopsis IV has been given (p. 273) only as far as 'They prepare to go to Angband', since the outline then turns away from the story of Beren and Lúthien themselves, according to my father's projection at that time for the further course of the Lay, and continues as follows:

11

Doriath. The hunt for Lúthien and the loss of Dairon. War on the borders. Boldog slain. So Thingol knows Lúthien not yet dead is caught, but fears that Boldog's raid means that Morgoth has got wind of her wandering. Actually it means no more than the legend of her beauty.

An embassy comes from Celegorm. Thingol learns that Beren is dead, and Lúthien at Nargothrond. He is roused to wrath by the hints of the letter that Celegorm will leave Felagund to die, and will usurp the throne of Nargothrond. And so Thingol had better let Lúthien stay where she is.

Thingol prepares an army to go against Nargothrond, but learns that Lúthien has left, and Celegorm and Curufin have fled to Aglon. He sends an embassy to Aglon. It is routed and put to flight by the sudden onslaught of Carcharas. Mablung escapes to tell the tale. The devastation of Doriath by Carcharas.

12

The rape of the Silmaril and the home-coming of Beren and Lúthien.

13

The wolf-hunt and death of Huan and Beren.

14

The recall of Beren and Huan.

Synopsis V continues as a more substantial preparation for the end of the poem never to be written, which my father at this stage conceived in three further Cantos.

12

Sorrow in Doriath at flight of Lúthien. Thingol's heart hardened against Beren, despite words of Melian. A mighty hunt is made throughout the realm, but many of the folk strayed north and west and south of Doriath beyond the magic of Melian and were lost. Dairon became separated from his comrades and wandered away into the East of the world, where some say he pipes yet seeking Lúthien in vain.

The embassy of Celegorm tells Thingol that Beren and Felagund are dead, that Celegorm will make himself king of Narog, and while telling him that Lúthien is safe in Nargothrond and treating for her hand, hints that she will not return: it also warns him to trouble not the matter of the Silmarils. Thingol is wroth – and is moved to think better of Beren, while yet blaming [him] for the woes that followed his coming to Doriath, and most for loss of Dairon.

Thingol arms for war against Celegorm. Melian says she would forbid this evil war of Elf with Elf, but that never shall Thingol cross blade with Celegorm. Thingol's army meets with the host of Boldog on the borders of Doriath. Morgoth has heard of the beauty of Lúthien, and the rumour of her wandering. He has ordered Thû and the Orcs to capture her. A battle is fought and Thingol is victorious. The Orcs are driven into Taur-na-Fuin or slain. Thingol himself slays Boldog. Mablung Heavyhand was Thingol's chief warrior and fought at his side; Beleg was the chief of his scouts. Though victorious Thingol is filled with still more disquiet at Morgoth's hunt for Lúthien. Beleg goes forth from the camp on Doriath's borders and journeys, unseen by the archers, to Narog. He brings tidings of the flight of Lúthien, the rescue of Beren, and the exile of Celegorm and Curufin. He [read Thingol] goes home and sends an embassy to Aglon to demand recompense, and aid in the rescue of Lúthien. He renews his vow to imprison Beren for ever if he does not return with a Silmaril, though Melian warns him that he knows not what he says.

The embassy meets the onslaught of Carcharos who by fate or the power of the Silmaril bursts into Doriath. All perish save Mablung who brings the news. Devastation of the woods. The wood-elves flee to the caves.

13

Beren and Lúthien escape to the Shadowy Mountains, but become lost and bewildered in the dreads of Nan Dungorthin, and are hunted by phantoms, and snared at last by the great spiders. Huan rescues them, and guides them down Sirion, and so they reach Doriath from the south, and find the woods silent and empty till they come to the guarded bridge.

Huan, Beren, and Lúthien come before Thingol. They tell their tale; yet Thingol will not relent. The brave words of Beren, revealing the mystery of Carcharos. Thingol relents. The wolf-hunt is prepared. Huan, Thingol, Beren, and Mablung depart. Lúthien abides with Melian in foreboding. Carcharos is slain, but slew Huan who defended Beren. Yet Beren is mortally hurt, though he lived to place the Silmaril on Thingol's hand which Mablung cut from the wolf's belly.

The meeting and farewell of Beren and Tinúviel beneath Hirilorn. Burial of Huan and Beren.

14

Fading of Lúthien. Her journey to Mandos. The song of Lúthien in Mandos' halls, and the release of Beren. They dwelt long in Broseliand, but spake never more to mortal Men, and Lúthien became mortal.

This concludes all the material in the outlines. For the references to Boldog's raid, and Morgoth's interest in Lúthien, in the Lay itself see lines 2127-36, 2686-94, 3198-3201, and 3665-75.

In Synopsis IV (p. 310) Boldog's raid takes place earlier in the story, before the coming of Celegorm's embassy to Thingol, but its narrative value is obscure. It is not clear why the raid must inform Thingol that 'Lúthien not yet dead is caught', nor why he should conclude that 'Morgoth has got wind of her wandering'. Moreover the statement that 'actually it means no more than the legend of her beauty' can only mean (if Morgoth had not heard of her wandering forth from Doriath) that he sent out Boldog's warband with the express intention of seizing her from the fastness of the Thousand Caves.

In Synopsis V the raid was moved to a later point, and the host out of Doriath that destroyed Boldog was actually moving against Nargothrond. In The Silmarillion the embassy from Celegorm survived, but of Boldog's raid there is no hint, and Thingol does no more than 'think to make war' on Nargothrond:

But Thingol learned that Lúthien had journeyed far from Doriath, for messages came secretly from Celegorm, ... saying that Felagund was dead, and Beren was dead, but Lúthien was in Nargothrond, and that Celegorm would wed her. Then Thingol was wrathful, and he sent forth spies, thinking to make war upon Nargothrond; and thus he learned that Lúthien was again fled, and that Celegorm and Curufin were driven from Nargothrond. Then his counsel was in doubt, for he had not the strength to assail the seven sons of Fëanor; but he sent messengers to Himring to summon their aid in seeking for Lúthien, since Celegorm had not sent her to the house of her father, nor had he kept her safely (pp. 183-4).

The 'spies' of this passage were derived from Beleg's secret mission to Nargothrond in Synopsis V (p. 311). It seems probable that my father actually discarded Boldog's raid; and with it went all suggestion that Lúthien's wandering had been reported to Morgoth (cf. lines 3665 ff.) and that Thû was given orders to capture her (Synopsis V). The passage in Canto IX of the Lay (2686-94) where Thû recognised Lúthien's voice - or, at least, knew that it must be she who was singing - does not, indeed, at all suggest that Thû was actively seeking her. These lines were the source for the passage in The Silmarillion, where Sauron standing in the tower of Tol-in-Gaurhoth smiled hearing her voice, for he knew that it was the daughter of Melian. The fame of the beauty of Lúthien, and the wonder of her song had long gone forth from Doriath; and he thought to make her captive and hand her over to the power of Morgoth, for his reward would be great.

But the idea that the beauty and singing of Lúthien had come to the ears of Sauron survives from the stage when Morgoth's interest in her was an important motive.

As noticed earlier (p. 209), the wandering and loss of Daeron goes back to the Tale of Tinúviel (ll. 20-1) and survived into The Silmarillion (p. 183), where it is said that Daeron passed over the Blue Mountains 'into the East of Middle-earth, where for many ages he made lament beside dark waters for Lúthien'. Less is made in the later story of the great hunt for Lúthien, and nothing is said of the changing moods and intentions of Thingol towards Beren referred to in Synopsis V. The 'political' element of the ambitions of Celegorm and Curufin and the attempted browbeating and blackmail of Thingol is of course a new element that first appears in the Synopses (other than the earlier reference in the Lay, 2501-3, to the brothers' intentions in this regard), since the 'Nargothrond Element' is wholly absent from the Tale of Tinúviel; and similarly the interception of the embassy from Thingol to Aglon by Carcharoth, from which Mablung alone survived. This also remains in The Silmarillion.

In Synopsis V, where the bearing away of Beren and Lúthien from Angband by Thorondor is not yet present, they flee from Angband 'towards the waters of Sirion' (p. 309), and (p. 312) 'escape to the Shadowy Mountains, but become lost and bewildered in the dreads of Nan Dungorthin, and are hunted by phantoms, and snared at last by the great spiders. Huan rescues them, and guides them down Sirion ...' In the Tale likewise (ll. 34-5), Huan rescued them from 'Nan Dumgorthin'. This is a point of geography and shifting nomenclature of great perplexity. I have shown (pp. 170-1, 234) that the meaning of 'Shadowy Mountains' changes in the course of the Lay of Leithian: whereas at first (lines 386, 1318) the reference is to the Mountains of Terror (Ered Gorgoroth), subsequently (line 1940) it is to Ered Wethrin, the range fencing Hithlum. The Mountains of Terror, with the great spiders, are described in lines 563 ff.

In the present passage of Synopsis V the statements that Beren and Lúthien escaping from Angband fled towards Sirion, and that Huan rescuing them from Nan Dungorthin guided them down Sirion, very strongly suggests that the Shadowy Mountains are here again, as might be expected, Ered Wethrin. Nan Dungorthin must then be placed as in The Children of Húrin, west of Sirion, in a valley of the southern slopes of the Shadowy Mountains. But this means that the great spiders are found in both places.

It is difficult to suggest a satisfactory explanation of this. A possibility is that when Beren crossed the Mountains of Terror and encountered the spiders (lines 569–74) ‘Nan Dungorthin’ was placed in that region, though it is not named; in Synopsis V however it is again placed, with its spiders, west of Sirion.

In the later story the eagles set Beren and Lúthien down on the borders of Doriath, and Huan came to them there.

In the conclusion of Synopsis V there is very little that is at variance with the story of the wolf-hunt and the death of Beren in The Silmarillion, so far as can be seen from the very compressed outline; but Beleg was not present at the hunt in the Synopsis, as he was not in the Tale (Il. 38).

The sentence that concludes Synopsis IV is curious: ‘The recall of Beren and Huan’ (p. 311). ‘Recall’ obviously refers to the return from Mandos (the last heading of Synopsis I is ‘Tinúviel goes to Mandos and recalls Beren’); in which case my father must have intended to have Huan return from the dead with Beren and Lúthien. In the Tale of Tinúviel Huan was not slain (Il. 39), and there was no prophecy concerning his fate to fall before the mightiest wolf that should ever walk the world; but he became the companion of Mablung (Il. 41), and in the Tale of the Nauglafring he returned to Beren and Lúthien in the land of i-Guilwarthon after the death of Thingol and the sack of the Thousand Caves.

APPENDIX

C. S. Lewis's Commentary on the Lay of Leithian

I give here the greater part of this commentary, for which see pp. 150–1. * Lewis's line-references are of course changed throughout to those in this book. The letters H, J, K, L, P, R refer to the imaginary manuscripts of the ancient poem.

For the text criticised in the first entry of the commentary see pp. 157–8, i.e. text B(1).

- 4 Meats were sweet. This is the reading of PRK. Let any one believe if he can that our author gave such a cacophany. J His drink was sweet his dishes dear. L His drink was sweet his dish was dear. (Many scholars have rejected lines 1–8 altogether as unworthy of the poet. 'They were added by a later hand to supply a gap in the archetype,' says Peabody; and adds 'The more melodious movement and surer narrative stride of the passage beginning with line 9 [But fairer than are born to

Men] should convince the dullest that here, and here only, the authentic work of the poet begins.' I am not convinced that H, which had better be quoted in full, does not give the true opening of the Geste.

*That was long since in ages old When first the stars in heaven rolled,
There dwelt beyond Broseliand, While loneliness yet held the land,
A great king comely under crown,
The gold was woven in his gown,
The gold was clasped about his feet,
The gold about his waist did meet.
And in his many-pillared house
Many a gold bee and ivory mouse And amber chessmen on their field
Of copper, many a drinking horn
Dear purchased from shy unicorn Lay piled, with gold in gleaming grot.
All these he had etc.)*

It seems virtually certain that it was Lewis's criticism that led my father to rewrite the opening (the B (2) text, [p. 154). If the amber chessmen and ivory mice found no place in the new version, it is notable that in Lewis's lines occur the words 'And in his many-pillared house'. These are not derived from the B(1) text which Lewis read, but in B (2) appears the line (14) in many-pillared halls of stone. It seems then that Durin's many-pillared halls in Gimli's song in Moria were originally so called by C. S. Lewis, thinking of the halls of Thingol in Doriath.]

- 40 The description of Lúthien has been too often and too justly praised to encourage the mere commentator in intruding.
- 68 tall. Thus PRKJH. L vast. Schick's complimentary title of 'internal rime' for these cacophonies does not much mend matters. 'The poet of the Geste knew nothing of internal rime, and its appearance (so called) is an infallible mark of corruption' (Pumpnickel). But cf. 209, 413.
- 71– The reader who wishes to acquire a 2 touchstone for the true style of the Geste had better learn by heart this faultless and characteristic distych.
- 77 HL Of mortal men at feast has heard

[The line in B(1) was of mortal feaster ever heard. With hath for has Lewis's line was adopted.]

99– This is considered by all critics 150 one of the noblest passages in the Geste.

112 Notice the double sense of within (macrocosmic and microcosmic).
That the original poet may have been unconscious of this need not detract from our pleasure.

[Lewis was clearly right to suspect that the original poet had no such double sense in mind.]

117 H The legions of his marching hate

[Lewis was criticising the original line in B his evil legions' marshalled hate. With retention of marshalled for marching Lewis's line was adopted.]

[In the following comment the reading criticised was:

swift ruin red of fire and sword leapt forth on all denied his word, and all the lands beyond the hills

125

were filled with sorrow and with ills.]

124 The relative understood. I suspect both the construction and the word denied, neither of which has the true ring. H reads:

*And ruin of red fire and sword
To all that would not hail him lord Came fast, and far beyond the hills Spread Northern wail and iron ills.
And therefore in wet woods and cold etc.*

130 'A weak line' (Peabody).

[The original reading in B which Lewis criticised was who had this king once held in scorn, changed to who once a prince of Men was born]

137 Some emend. The rhythm, however, is good, and probably would occur more often if the syllabic prudery of scribes had not elsewhere 'emended' it.

172 LH When I lost all

[No alteration made to the text.]

173– L Thus, out of wet night while he gazed,
4 he thought, with heavy heart amazed

[No alteration made to the text.]

[In the following comment the reading criticised was:

But ere he dared to call her name or ask how she escaping came]

175– she escaping. A Latinised phrase, at 6 once betraying very late corruption.
The ugly assonance ere ... dared confirms my suspicion of the distych. No satisfactory emendation has been proposed.

[she escaping came was changed to she escaped and came]

196 H Whining, his spirit ached for ease.
Peabody observes of the whole passage:
'The combination of extreme simplicity, with convincing truth of psychology, and the pathos which, without comment, makes us aware that Gorlim is at once pardonable and unpardonable, render this part of the story extremely affecting.'

[No alteration made to line 196]

208 haply. LH chance.

[No alteration made to the text.]

209– One of the few passages in which 10 Schick's theory of deliberate internal rime finds some support.

[See the comment on line 68.]

215 that. H the.

[No alteration made to the text.]

[The lines 313–16 referred to in the following comment had been bracketed for exclusion, and that at 317 changed to Then, before the text went to Lewis.]

313 H Thus Morgoth loved that his own reads foe
 Should in his service deal the blow.
 Then Beren ...

‘Our scribe is right in his erasure of the second distych, but wrong in his erasure of the first’ (Peabody). The first erased couplet certainly deserves to remain in the text; indeed its loss seriously impairs the reality of Morgoth. I should print as in H, enclosing Thus ... blow in brackets or dashes.

[My father ticked the first two lines (313–14), which may show that he accepted this suggestion. I have let all four stand in the text.]

400 Of Canto 2 as a whole Peabody writes: ‘If this is not good romantic narrative, I confess myself ignorant of the meaning of the words.’

401 et seq. A more philosophical account of the period is given in the so called Poema Historiale, probably contemporary with the earliest MSS of the Geste. The relevant passage runs as follows:

*There was a time before the ancient sun And swinging wheels of heaven had learned to run
More certainly than dreams; for dreams themselves
Had bodies then and filled the world with elves.
The starveling lusts whose walk is now confined
To darkness and the cellarage of the mind,
And shudderings and despairs and shapes of sin
Then walked at large, and were not cooped within.
Thought cast a shadow: brutes could speak: and
men
Get children on a star. For spirit then Kneaded a fluid world and dreamed it new Each moment. Nothing yet was false or true.*

[Humphrey Carpenter, who cites these verses in The Inklings, says (p. 30): 'Sometimes Lewis actually suggested entirely new passages to replace lines he thought poor, and here too he ascribed his own versions to supposedly historical sources. For example, he suggested that the lines about the "elder days" [401 ff.] could be replaced by the following stanza of his own, which he described as "the so called Poema Historiale [&c.]". But he cannot have intended these lines, which not only, as Humphrey Carpenter says, show 'how greatly Lewis's poetic imagination differed from Tolkien's', but are in a different metre, as a replacement; see Lewis's comment on lines 438-42.]

413 Another instance where the 'internal rime' theory is justified.

438- Almost certainly spurious. This 42 abstract philosophical statement – which would not surprise us in the scholastic verse of the period, such as the Poema Historiale – is quite foreign to the manner of the Geste. L reads:

... singing in the wood
And long he stood and long he stood Till, many a day, with hound and hail
His people seek him ere they sail,
Then, finding not, take ship with tears.
But after a long tale of years (Though but an hour to him it seemed)
He found her where she lay and dreamed.

[My father marked lines 438 ff. in the typescript, but made no change to the text.]

516 Flowering candles. The reader should notice how the normally plain style of the Geste has yet the power of rising into such expressions as this without losing its unity.

[In the following comment the reading criticised was:

the silent elms stood dark and tall, and round their boles did shadows fall

518

where glimmered faint ...]

518 did PRK, let JL. Though neither is good, PRK seems the better reading. Its slight clumsiness may be passed over by a reader intent on the story: the ‘neat’ evasion let, with its purely formal attribution of an active rôle to the trees, is much worse, as cheap scenery is worse than a plain backcloth. H reads:

*The silent elms stood tall and grey
And at the roots long shadows lay*

519– ‘This passage’, Peabody observes, 42 ‘amply atones for the poet’s lapse
(dormitat Homerus) in 518. Ipsa mollities.’

[I do not understand why Lewis picked particularly on did at line 518: the use of did as a metrical aid was very common in the B-text as Lewis saw it – it occurred twice, for instance, in the passage here praised: did flutter 523, did waver 533, both subsequently changed.]

555– ‘O si sic omnia! Does not our poet

- 6 show glimpses of the true empyrean of poesy, however, in his workmanlike humility, he has chosen more often to inhabit the milder and aerial (not aetherial) middle heaven?' (Pumpernickel). Some have seen in the conception of death-into-life a late accretion. But cf. the very early lyric preserved in the MS N3057, now in the public library at Narrowthrode (the ancient Nargothrond), which is probably as early as the Geste, though like all the scholastic verse it strikes a more modern note:

*Because of endless pride Reborn with endless error,
Each hour I look aside
Upon my secret mirror,
And practice postures there
To make my image fair.*

*You give me grapes, and I, Though staring, turn to see How dark the cool globes lie
In the white hand of me,
And stand, yet gazing thither,
Till the live clusters wither.*

*So should I quickly die Narcissus-like for want,
Save that betimes my eye*

Sees there such shapes as haunt Beyond nightmare and make Pride humble for pride's sake.

*Then, and then only, turning
The stiff neck round, I grow
A molten man all burning
And look behind, and know Who made the flaw, what light makes dark, what fair
Makes foul my shadowy form reflected there,
That self-love, big with love, dying, its child may
bear.*

[It is a matter for speculation, what the author of Nargothrond thought of the public library at Narrowthode. – This poem, with some alterations, was included in The Pilgrim's Regress (1933).]

- 563– Sic in all MSS. The passage is, of 92 course, genuine, and truly worthy of the Geste. But surely it must originally have stood at 391 or 393?
 The artificial insertion of Beren's journey in its present place – where it appears as retrospect not as direct narrative, though defensible, belongs to a kind of art more sophisticated than that of the Geste: it is just such a transposition as a late Broseliandic literary redactor would make under the influence of the classical epic.

A quarter of a century later, or more, my father rewrote this part of the poem; and he took Lewis's advice. See [p. 352.]

[The original reading of B criticised in the next comment (lines 629 ff.) was:

*Then stared he wild in dumbness bound
at silent trees, deserted ground;
the dizzy moon was twisted grey in tears, for she had fled away.]*

629– Thus in PRKJ. The Latinised adverbial 30 use of the adjective in wild and the omitted articles in the next line are suspicious.

L *But wildly Beren gazed around
On silent trees (and)* empty ground.
The dizzy moon etc.*

* Peabody supplies and. But the monosyllabic foot is quite possible. Cf.
687.

H *But wildly Beren gazed around.
Emptied the tall trees stood. The ground Lay empty. A lonely moon looked grey Upon the untrodden forest way.*

I prefer H because it gets rid of the conceit (it is little more) about the moon. (This sort of half-hearted personification is, of course, to be distinguished from genuine mythology.)

[Against this my father scribbled on Lewis's text: 'Not so!! The moon was dizzy and twisted because of the tears in his eyes.' Nonetheless he struck the two lines out heavily in the typescript, and I have excluded them from the text.]

635- An excellent simile.
6

641 Peabody, though a great friend to metrical resolutions in general, finds this particular resolution (Bewildered enchanted) 'singularly harsh'. Perhaps the original text read wildered.

[The reading in B was bewildered, enchanted and forlorn. My father then changed bewildered to wildered and placed it after enchanted.]

651- JHL transpose.
2

[This was done. Cf. lines 1222-3, where these lines are repeated but left in the original sequence.]

[After line 652 B had:

Thus thought his heart. No words would come from his fast lips, for smitten dumb a spell lay on him, as a dream

in longing chained beside the stream.

After seeing Lewis's comment my father marked this passage 'revise', and also with a deletion mark, on which basis I have excluded the four lines from the text.]

Only in PR. Almost undoubtedly spurious. 'The latest redactors', says Pumpernickel, 'were always needlessly amplifying, as if the imagination of their readers could do nothing for itself, and thus blunting the true force and energy of the Geste....' Read:

A heartache and a loneliness
- Enchanted waters pitiless.'
A summer waned etc.

[heartache was the original reading of B at 651, changed later to hunger, but retained at 1223.]

653- Of this admirable passage Peabody 72 remarks: 'It is as if the wood itself were speaking.'

677- LH From her dim cave the damp moon eyed 9 White mists that float from earth to hide
The sluggard morrow's sun and drip

[No alteration made to the text.]

683 Beat, which is utterly inappropriate to the sound described, must be a corruption.

No plausible emendation has been suggested.

[My father scribbled in a hesitant substitute for beat and a different form for line 684 (of his own feet on leafy....) but I cannot read the rhyming words.]

685– In praise of this passage I need 708 not add to the innumerable eulogies of my predecessors.

710 Bentley read saw far off, to avoid the ugliness that always results from w-final followed by an initial vowel in the next word.

[The reading criticised was saw afar, and the line was changed as suggested.]

715 Stole he PRK. He stole JHL. PRK looks like the metrical ‘improvement’ of a scribe: dearly bought by a meaningless inversion.

[The reading criticised was Then stole he nigh, changed to Then nigh he stole.]

727– This passage, as it stands, is 45 seriously corrupt, though the beauty of the original can still be discerned.

[See the following notes.]

[The original reading of B in lines 729–30 was:

the hillock green he leapt upon – the elfin loveliness was gone;]

729 Intolerable bathos and prose in a passage of such tension.

[The original reading of B in line 739 was:

its echoes wove a halting spell:]

739 Why halting? ‘Let the amanuensis take back his rubbish’ (Bentley).

[Against this my father wrote ‘A spell to halt anyone’, but in the margin of B he wrote staying/binding, and I have adopted binding in the text.]

[The original reading of B in lines 741–5 was:

His voice such love and longing fill 741

*one moment stood she, touched and still;
one moment only but he came and all his heart was burned with flame.*

744]

741– The historic present is always to be 2 suspected. The second verse is hopelessly corrupt. Touched in this sense is impossible in the language of the Geste: and if the word were possible, the conception is fitter for a nineteenth century drawing-room in Narrowthrode than for the loves of heroes. HL read:

*And clear his voice came as a bell Whose echoes wove a wavering spell
Tinúviel. Tinúviel.
Such love and longing filled his voice
That, one moment, without choice,
One moment without fear or shame,
Tinúviel stood; and like a flame
He leapt towards her as she stayed
And caught and kissed that elfin maid.*

[My father marked the passage 'revise', and very roughly corrected it (adopting the concluding verses of Lewis's version) to the form which I have given in the text, despite the defective couplet.]

[The original reading of B was:

aswoon in mingled grief and bliss, enchantment of an elvish kiss.]

760– L Aswoon with grief, aswoon with bliss,
1 Enchanted of an elvish kiss.

[enchanted for enchantment was adopted.]

The original reading – the text B(1) seen by Lewis, see [p. 194 – of lines 762–73 was:

*and saw within his blinded eyes a light that danced like silver flies a starlit face of tenderness crowned by the stars of Elfinesse.
A mist was in his face like hair,*

5

and laughing whispers moved the air – ‘O! dance with me now, Beren. Dance!’ – a silver laugh, a mocking glance: ‘Come dance the wild and headlong maze those dance, we’re told, beyond the ways

10

*who dwell that lead to lands of Men!
Come teach the feet of Lúthien!’
The shadows wrapped her. Like a stone the daylight found him cold and lone.*

On line 8 of this passage Lewis commented:]

L a silver laughter, an arch glance

‘Whether mocking or arch is the more intolerably miss-ish I care not to decide’ (Peabody).

[The line was abandoned in the B(2) version. On lines 9–12
Lewis commented:]

JHL omit. Is not the whole passage [from the beginning of the Canto to the end of the passage from B(1) given above] unworthy of the poet?

[It is clear that this severe criticism led to the rewriting of the opening of the Canto.]

775 The chiasmus is suspiciously classical. H gives Dark is the sun, cold is the air.

[Against this my father scribbled: 'But classics did not invent chiasmus! – it is perfectly natural.' (Chiasmus: a grammatical figure by which the order of words in one of two parallel clauses is inverted in the other.))]

[The passage criticised by Lewis in the following comment was:

Hateful art thou, O Land of Trees!
My flute shall finger no more seize;
may music perish etc.]

849 Clearly corrupt. HJL Oh hateful land of trees be mute! My fingers, now forget the flute!

[Against this my father wrote: 'Frightful 18th century!!!' But he reordered the second line to: my fingers the flute shall no more seize, and subsequently rewrote the passage to the form given in the text, lines 849-52.]

849– 'These lines are very noble' 83 (Pumpnickel).

909 cometh. HJL comes. HJL is certainly the more emphatic rhythm.

[No alteration made to the text.]

[The original reading of B at line 911 was:

... those shores,
those white rocks where the last tide roars]

911 ‘Where eight dull words oft creep in one low line.’ Lines of monosyllables are often to be found in the Geste, but rarely so clustered with consonants as this. No satisfactory emendation has been suggested. I suspect this is a garbled version of 1142–3: our scribes do not always accept or understand epic repetition.

[The emendation made to B and given in the text is derived from lines 1142–3 as Lewis suggested. His reference is to Pope, An Essay on Criticism, line 347: And ten low words oft creep in one dull line.]

978– In Gestestudien Vol. XIII pp. 9–930
9 the reader will find a summary of the critical war that has raged round the possibility of the assonance (or rime) of within-dim.

Perhaps a great deal of ink would have been saved if the scholars of the last century had been familiar with the L reading Where out of yawning arches came A white light like unmoving flame. 'My own conclusion is that if the assonance in the textus receptus is correct, the same phenomenon must originally have occurred often, and have been suppressed elsewhere by the scribes. Editorial effort might profitably be devoted to restoring it' (Schuffer). But cf. 1140-1.

[The original reading of B in lines 980-1 was:

With gentle hand there she him led down corridors etc.]

- 980 J Downward with gentle hand she him led, which explains the corruption. The verse originally ran Downward with gentle hand she led. The scribe of J, wrongly believing an object to be needed, inserted him. Vulg. then 'emends' the metre by dropping Downward and inserting there: thus giving a clumsy line.

[In this note Vulg. = Vulgate, the common or usual form of a literary work. My father wrote in Lewis's line on the B-text with his initials, and made the consequent change of down to through in line 981.]

[The original reading of B was: as into archéd halls was led]

991 HJL she led

996 L in old stone carven stood

[No alteration made to the text.]

[The original reading in B was: while waters endless dripped and ran]

1007 H While water forever dript and ran

[The original reading in B was: in lightless labyrinths endlessly]

1075 Labyrinths. HJL Labyrinth.

[Lewis corrected his spelling to Laborynth(s), against which my father queried: 'Why this spelling?']

980– The whole of this passage has always 1131 been deservedly regarded as one of the gems of the Geste.

1132– I suspect that this passage has

61 been greatly expanded by the late redactors who found their audience sometimes very ignorant of the myths. It is, as it stands, far from satisfactory. On the one hand it is too long an interruption of the action: on the other it is too succinct for a reader who knows nothing of the mythology. It is also obscure: thus in 1145 few readers can grasp that their means 'the Silmarils'. The shorter version of H and L, though not good, may in some respects be nearer the original:

*Then Thingol's warriors loud and long Laughed: for wide renown in song
Had Fëanor's gems o'er land and sea,
The Silmarils, the shiners three,
Three only, and in every one
The light that was before the sun
And moon, shone yet. But now no more Those leavings of the lights of yore
Were seen on earth's back: in the drear Abysm of Morgoth blazing clear
His iron crown they must adorn
And glitter on orcs and slaves forlorn etc.*

[My father put an exclamation mark against the shiners three; and he wrote an X against lines 1144-5 (see note to these lines).]

Here C. S. Lewis's commentary on The Gest of Beren and Lúthien ends, and no more is recorded of the opinions of Peabody, Pumpnickel, Schuffer and Schick in the volumes of Gestestudien – nor indeed, on this subject, of those of their generous-minded inventor.

IV

THE LAY OF LEITHIAN RECOMMENCED

When my father began the Lay of Leithian again from the beginning, he did not at first intend much more, perhaps, than a revision, an improvement of individual lines and short passages, but all on the original plan and structure. This, at least, is what he did with Canto I; and he carried out the revisions on the old B typescript. But with Canto II he was quickly carried into a far more radical reconstruction, and was virtually writing a new poem on the same subject and in the same metre as the old. This, it is true, was partly because the story of Gorlim had changed, but it is also clear that a new impulse had entered, seeking a new rather than merely altered expression. The old typescript was still used at least as a physical basis for the new writing, but for a long stretch the typed verses were simply struck through and the new written on inserted pages and slips.

The old Canto II of just over 300 lines was expanded to 500, and divided into new Cantos 2 and 3 (the old and the new can be conveniently distinguished by Roman and Arabic numerals).

The rewriting on the old typescript continues for a short distance into Canto III (new Canto 4) and then stops. On the basis of this now extremely chaotic text my father wrote out a fine, decorated manuscript, 'C', inevitably introducing some further changes; and this stops only a few lines short of the point where the rewriting on the B-text stops. Subsequently, an amanuensis typescript ('D') was made, in two copies, apparently with my father's supervision, but for the moment nothing need be said of this beyond noticing that he made certain changes to these texts at a later time.

The rewriting on the B-text was no doubt a secondary stage, of which the preliminary workings no longer exist; for in the case of the new Canto 4 such preliminary drafts are extant. On one of these pages, and quite obviously done at the same time as the verse-drafts, my father drew a floor-plan of part of the house 99 Holywell Street, Oxford, to which he removed in 1950. He doubtless drew the plan shortly before moving house, while pondering its best arrangement. It is clear then that a new start on the Lay of Leithian was one of the first things that he turned to when The Lord of the Rings was complete.

I give below the text of the manuscript C in its final form (that is, after certain changes had been made to it) so far as it goes (line 624), incorporating one or two very minor alterations made later to the D typescript(s), followed by a further short section (lines 625–60) found only in draft before being added to D. Brief Notes and Commentary are given on p. 348 ff.

THE LAY OF LEITHIAN

I. OF THINGOL IN DORIATH

A king there was in days of old:
ere Men yet walked upon the mould
his power was reared in caverns' shade,
his hand was over glen and glade.
Of leaves his crown, his mantle green,
his silver lances long and keen;
the starlight in his shield was caught,

ere moon was made or sun was wrought.

In after-days, when to the shore of Middle-earth from Valinor the Elven-hosts in might returned, and banners flew and beacons burned, when kings of Eldamar went by in strength of war, beneath the sky then still his silver trumpets blew	10 15 when sun was young and moon was new. Afar then in Beleriand, in Doriath's beleaguered land, King Thingol sat on guarded throne in many-pillared halls of stone: there beryl, pearl, and opal pale, and metal wrought like fishes' mail, buckler and corslet, axe and sword, and gleaming spears were laid in hoard: all these he had and counted small, for dearer than all wealth in hall, and fairer than are born to Men, a daughter had he, Lúthien.	 20 25

OF LÚTHIEN THE BELOVED

Such lissom limbs no more shall run on the green earth beneath the sun; so fair a maid no more shall be from dawn to dusk, from sun to sea. Her robe was blue as summer skies, but grey as evening were her eyes; her mantle sewn with lilies fair,	30 35
---	------------------------------

but dark as shadow was her hair.
Her feet were swift as bird on wing,
her laughter merry as the spring;
the slender willow, the bowing reed,
the fragrance of a flowering mead, 40
the light upon the leaves of trees,
the voice of water, more than these
her beauty was and blissfulness,
her glory and her loveliness.

She dwelt in the enchanted land 45 while elven-might yet held in hand
the woven woods of Doriath:
none ever thither found the path unbidden, none the forest-eaves dared pass, or stir the listening leaves. 50
To North there lay a land of dread, Dungorthin where all ways were dead
in hills of shadow bleak and cold; beyond was Deadly Nightshade's hold in Taur-nu-Fuin's fastness grim, 55 where sun was sick and moon was dim.
To South the wide earth unexplored;
to West the ancient Ocean roared,
unsailed and shoreless, wide and wild;
to East in peaks of blue were piled, 60
in silence folded, mist-enfurled,
the mountains of the outer world.

Thus Thingol in his dolven hall amid the Thousand Caverns tall of Menegroth as king abode: 65

to him there led no mortal road.
Beside him sat his deathless queen, fair Melian, and wove unseen nets of enchantment round his throne, and spells were laid on tree and stone: 70 sharp was his sword and high his helm,
the king of beech and oak and elm.
When grass was green and leaves were long,
when finch and mavis sang their song, there under bough and under sun 75 in shadow and in light would run fair Lúthien the elven-maid, dancing in dell and grassy glade.

OF DAIRON MINSTREL OF THINGOL

When sky was clear and stars were keen,
then Dairon with his fingers lean, 80
as daylight melted into eve, a trembling music sweet would weave on flutes of silver, thin and clear for Lúthien, the maiden dear.

There mirth there was and voices bright; 85
there eve was peace and morn was light;
there jewel gleamed and silver wan and red gold on white fingers shone, and elanor and niphredil bloomed in the grass unfading still, 90 while the endless years of Elven-land
rolled over far Beleriand,

until a day of doom befell,
as still the elven-harpers tell.

2. OF MORGOTH & THE SNARING OF GORLIM

Far in the Northern hills of stone 95
in caverns black there was a throne
by flame encircled; there the smoke in coiling columns rose to choke the breath of life, and there in deep and gasping dungeons lost would creep 100 to hopeless death all those who strayed by doom beneath that ghastly shade.

A king there sat, most dark and fell of all that under heaven dwell.
Than earth or sea, than moon or star 105 more ancient was he, mightier far in mind abysmal than the thought of Eldar or of Men, and wrought of strength primeval; ere the stone was hewn to build the world, alone 110 he walked in darkness, fierce and dire, burned, as he wielded it, by fire.

He 'twas that laid in ruin black the Blessed Realm and fled then back to Middle-earth anew to build 115 beneath the mountains mansions filled with misbegotten slaves of hate:
death's shadow brooded at his gate.
His hosts he armed with spears of steel and brands of flame, and at their heel 120

the wolf walked and the serpent crept with lidless eyes. Now forth they leapt, his ruinous legions, kindling war
in field and frith and woodland hoar.
Where long the golden elanor 125 had gleamed amid the grass they bore their banners black, where finch had sung and harpers silver harps had wrung now dark the ravens wheeled and cried amid the reek, and far and wide 130 the swords of Morgoth dripped with red above the hewn and trampled dead.
Slowly his shadow like a cloud rolled from the North, and on the proud that would not yield his vengeance fell; 135 to death or thraldom under hell all things he doomed: the Northern land lay cowed beneath his ghastly hand.

But still there lived in hiding cold
Bëor's son, Barahir the bold, 140 of land bereaved and lordship shorn
who once a prince of Men was born,
and now an outlaw lurked and lay
in the hard heath and woodland grey.

OF THE SAVING OF KING INGLOR FELAGUND BY THE XII BËORINGS

Twelve men beside him still there went, 145 still faithful when all hope was spent.
Their names are yet in elven-song remembered, though the years are long since doughty Dagnir and Ragnor,

Radhruin, Dairuin and Gildor,	150
Gorlim Unhappy, and Urthel, and Arthad and Hathaldir fell;
since the black shaft with venom'd wound took Belegund and Baragund, the mighty sons of Bregolas;	155
since he whose doom and deeds surpass all tales of Men was laid on bier, fair Beren son of Barahir.
For these it was, the chosen men
of Bëor's house, who in the fen	160
of reedy Serech stood at bay
about King Inglor in the day of his defeat, and with their swords thus saved of all the Elven-lords
the fairest; and his love they earned.	165
And he escaping south, returned to Nargothrond his mighty realm, where still he wore his crown'd helm;
but they to their northern homeland rode,
dauntless and few, and there abode	170
unconquered still, defying fate, pursued by Morgoth's sleepless hate.

OF TARN AELUIN THE BLESSED

Such deeds of daring there they wrought that soon the hunters that them sought at rumour of their coming fled.	175

Though price was set upon each head to match the weregild of a king, no soldier could to Morgoth bring news even of their hidden lair;
for where the highland brown and bare 180 above the darkling pines arose of steep Dorthonion to the snows and barren mountain-winds, there lay a tarn of water, blue by day, by night a mirror of dark glass 185 for stars of Elbereth that pass above the world into the West.
Once hallowed, still that place was blest:
no shadow of Morgoth, and no evil thing yet thither came; a whispering ring 190 of slender birches silver-grey stooped on its margin, round it lay a lonely moor, and the bare bones of ancient Earth like standing stones thrust through the heather and the whin; 195 and there by houseless Aeluin the hunted lord and faithful men under the grey stones made their den.

OF GORLIM UNHAPPY

Gorlim Unhappy, Angrim's son, as the tale tells, of these was one 200 most fierce and hopeless. He to wife, while fair was the fortune of his life,

took the white maiden Eilinel:
dear love they had ere evil fell.
To war he rode; from war returned 205 to find his fields and homestead burned, his house forsaken roofless stood,
empty amid the leafless wood;
and Eilinel, white Eilinel, was taken whither none could tell, 210
to death or thraldom far away.
Black was the shadow of that day for ever on his heart, and doubt still gnawed him as he went about in wilderness wandring, or at night 215 oft sleepless, thinking that she might ere evil came have timely fled into the woods: she was not dead, she lived, she would return again to seek him, and would deem him slain. 220 Therefore at whiles he left the lair, and secretly, alone, would peril dare,
and come to his old house at night, broken and cold, without fire or light, and naught but grief renewed would gain, 225 watching and waiting there in vain.

In vain, or worse – for many spies had Morgoth, many lurking eyes well used to pierce the deepest dark;
and Gorlim's coming they would mark 230 and would report. There came a day when once more Gorlim crept that way, down the deserted weedy lane

at dusk of autumn sad with rain and cold wind whining. Lo! a light 235 at window fluttering in the night amazed he saw; and drawing near,
between faint hope and sudden fear,
he looked within. 'Twas Eilinel!
Though changed she was, he knew her well. 240
With grief and hunger she was worn, her tresses tangled, raiment torn;
her gentle eyes with tears were dim,
as soft she wept: 'Gorlim, Gorlim!
Thou canst not have forsaken me. 245
Then slain, alas! thou slain must be!
And I must linger cold, alone,
and loveless as a barren stone!'

One cry he gave - and then the light blew out, and in the wind of night 250 wolves howled; and on his shoulder fell suddenly the griping hands of hell.
There Morgoth's servants fast him caught and he was cruelly bound, and brought to Sauron captain of the host, 255 the lord of werewolf and of ghost, most foul and fell of all who knelt at Morgoth's throne. In might he dwelt on Gaurhoth Isle; but now had ridden with strength abroad, by Morgoth bidden 260 to find the rebel Barahir.
He sat in dark encampment near,
and thither his butchers dragged their prey.
There now in anguish Gorlim lay:

with bond on neck, on hand and foot, 265 to bitter torment he was put,
to break his will and him constrain to buy with treason end of pain.
But naught to them would he reveal of Barahir, nor break the seal 270 of faith that on his tongue was laid;
until at last a pause was made,
and one came softly to his stake,
a darkling form that stooped, and spake to him of Eilinel his wife. 275

‘Wouldst thou,’ he said, ‘forsake thy life, who with few words might win release for her, and thee, and go in peace, and dwell together far from war, friends of the King? What wouldst thou more?’ 280 And Gorlim, now long worn with pain, yearning to see his wife again (whom well he weened was also caught in Sauron’s net), allowed the thought to grow, and faltered in his troth. 285

Then straight, half willing and half loath, they brought him to the seat of stone where Sauron sat. He stood alone before that dark and dreadful face, and Sauron said: ‘Come, mortal base! 290
What do I hear? That thou wouldst dare to barter with me? Well, speak fair!
What is thy price?’ And Gorlim low bowed down his head, and with great woe, word on slow word, at last implored 295 that merciless and faithless lord that he might free depart, and might again find Eilinel the White, and dwell with her, and cease from war against the King. He craved no more. 300

Then Sauron smiled, and said: 'Thou thrall!
The price thou askest is but small for treachery and shame so great!
I grant it surely! Well, I wait:
Come! Speak now swiftly and speak true!' 305
Then Gorlim wavered, and he drew half back; but Sauron's daunting eye there held him, and he dared not lie:
as he began, so must he wend from first false step to faithless end: 310 he all must answer as he could,
betray his lord and brotherhood,
and cease, and fall upon his face.

Then Sauron laughed aloud. 'Thou base, thou cringing worm! Stand up, 315 and hear me! And now drink the cup that I have sweetly blent for thee!
Thou fool: a phantom thou didst see that I, I Sauron, made to snare thy lovesick wits. Naught else was there. 320
Cold 'tis with Sauron's wraiths to wed!
Thy Eilinel! She is long since dead, dead, food of worms less low than thou.
And yet thy boon I grant thee now:
to Eilinel thou soon shalt go, 325 and lie in her bed, no more to know of war – or manhood. Have thy pay!’

And Gorlim then they dragged away, and cruelly slew him; and at last in the dank mould his body cast, 330 where Eilinel long since had lain in the burned woods by butchers slain.

Thus Gorlim died an evil death,
and cursed himself with dying breath,
and Barahir at last was caught 335 in Morgoth’s snare; for set at naught by treason was the ancient grace that guarded long that lonely place, Tarn Aeluin: now all laid bare were secret paths and hidden lair. 340

3. OF BEREN SON OF BARAHIR & HIS ESCAPE

Dark from the North now blew the cloud;
the winds of autumn cold and loud hissed in the heather; sad and grey Aeluin’s mournful water lay.
‘Son Beren’, then said Barahir, 345 ‘Thou knowst the rumour that we hear of strength from the Gaurhoth that is sent against us; and our food nigh spent.
On thee the lot falls by our law to go forth now alone to draw 350 what help thou canst from the hidden few that feed us still, and what is new to learn. Good fortune go with thee!

In speed return, for grudgingly we spare thee from our brotherhood, 355 so small: and Gorlim in the wood is long astray or dead. Farewell!’
As Beren went, still like a knell resounded in his heart that word, the last of his father that he heard. 360

Through moor and fen, by tree and briar he wandered far: he saw the fire of Sauron’s camp, he heard the howl of hunting Orc and wolf a-prowl, and turning back, for long the way, 365 benighted in the forest lay.
In weariness he then must sleep, fain in a badger-hole to creep, and yet he heard (or dreamed it so) nearby a marching legion go 370 with clink of mail and clash of shields up towards the stony mountain-fields.
He slipped then into darkness down, until, as man that waters drown strives upwards gasping, it seemed to him 375 he rose through slime beside the brim of sullen pool beneath dead trees.
Their livid boughs in a cold breeze trembled, and all their black leaves stirred:
each leaf a black and croaking bird, 380 whose neb a gout of blood let fall.
He shuddered, struggling thence to crawl through winding weeds, when far away he saw a shadow faint and grey gliding across the dreary lake. 385

Slowly it came, and softly spake:

‘Gorlim I was, but now a wraith of will defeated, broken faith, traitor betrayed. Go! Stay not here!

Awaken, son of Barahir, 390 and haste! For Morgoth’s fingers close upon thy father’s throat; he knows your trysts, your paths, your secret lair.’

Then he revealed the devil’s snare in which he fell, and failed; and last 395 begging forgiveness, wept, and passed out into darkness. Beren woke, leapt up as one by sudden stroke with fire of anger filled. His bow and sword he seized, and like the roe 400

hotfoot o’er rock and heath he sped before the dawn. Ere day was dead to Aeluin at last he came,

as the red sun westward sank in flame;

but Aeluin was red with blood, 405

red were the stones and trampled mud.

Black in the birches sat a-row

the raven and the carrion crow;

wet were their nebs, and dark the meat that dripped beneath their griping feet. 410

One croaked: ‘Ha, ha, he comes too late!’

‘Ha, ha!’ they answered, ‘ha! too late!’

There Beren laid his father’s bones in haste beneath a cairn of stones;

no graven rune nor word he wrote 415

o’er Barahir, but thrice he smote

the topmost stone, and thrice aloud he cried his name. 'Thy death', he vowed,
'I will avenge. Yea, though my fate should lead at last to Angband's gate.' 420
And then he turned, and did not weep:
too dark his heart, the wound too deep.
Out into night, as cold as stone, loveless, friendless, he strode alone.

Of hunter's lore he had no need 425
the trail to find. With little heed his ruthless foe, secure and proud, marched north away with blowing loud of brazen horns their lord to greet, trampling the earth with grinding feet. 430

Behind them bold but wary went now Beren, swift as hound on scent, until beside a darkling well, where Rivil rises from the fell down into Serech's reeds to flow, 435
he found the slayers, found his foe.

From hiding on the hillside near he marked them all: though less than fear, too many for his sword and bow to slay alone. Then, crawling low 440 as snake in heath, he nearer crept.

There many weary with marching slept,
but captains, sprawling on the grass, drank and from hand to hand let pass their booty, grudging each small thing 445 raped from dead bodies. One a ring held up, and laughed: 'Now, mates,' he cried

'here's mine! And I'll not be denied, though few be like it in the land.
For I 'twas wrenched it from the hand 450 of that same Barahir I slew, the robber-knave. If tales be true, he had it of some elvish lord,
for the rogue-service of his sword.
No help it gave to him – he's dead. 455
They're parlous, elvish rings, 'tis said;
still for the gold I'll keep it, yea and so eke out my niggard pay.
Old Sauron bade me bring it back,
and yet, methinks, he has no lack 460
of weightier treasures in his hoard:
the greater the greedier the lord!
So mark ye, mates, ye all shall swear
the hand of Barahir was bare!'
And as he spoke an arrow sped 465 from tree behind, and forward dead choking he fell with barb in throat;
with leering face the earth he smote.
Forth, then as wolfhound grim there leapt Beren among them. Two he swept 470 aside with sword; caught up the ring;
slew one who grasped him; with a spring back into shadow passed, and fled before their yells of wrath and dread of ambush in the valley rang. 475
Then after him like wolves they sprang, howling and cursing, gnashing teeth, hewing and bursting through the heath, shooting wild arrows, sheaf on sheaf,

at trembling shade or shaken leaf. 480

In fateful hour was Beren born:
he laughed at dart and wailing horn;
fleetest of foot of living men, tireless on fell and light on fen, elf-wise in wood, he passed away, 485 defended by his hauberk grey of dwarvish craft in Nogrod made, where hammers rang in cavern's shade.

As fearless Beren was renowned:
when men most hardy upon ground 490 were reckoned folk would speak his name, foretelling that his after-fame would even golden Hador pass or Barahir and Bregolas;

but sorrow now his heart had wrought 495 to fierce despair, no more he fought in hope of life or joy or praise,

but seeking so to use his days only that Morgoth deep should feel the sting of his avenging steel, 500 ere death he found and end of pain:
his only fear was thraldom's chain.

Danger he sought and death pursued,
and thus escaped the doom he wooed, and deeds of breathless daring wrought 505 alone, of which the rumour brought new hope to many a broken man.

They whispered 'Beren', and began in secret swords to whet, and soft by shrouded hearths at evening oft 510 songs they would sing of Beren's bow, of Dagmor his sword: how he would go silent to camps and slay the chief, or trapped in his hiding past belief would slip away, and under night by mist or moon, or by the light of open day would come again.

Of hunters hunted, slayers slain
they sang, of Gorgol the Butcher hewn, of ambush in Ladros, fire in Drûn,
of thirty in one battle dead,
of wolves that yelped like curs and fled, yea, Sauron himself with wound in hand.

Thus one alone filled all that land with fear and death for Morgoth's folk;
his comrades were the beech and oak
who failed him not, and wary things with fur and fell and feathered wings that silent wander, or dwell alone in hill and wild and waste of stone watched o'er his ways, his faithful friends.

Yet seldom well an outlaw ends;
and Morgoth was a king more strong
than all the world has since in song recorded: dark athwart the land reached out the shadow of his hand, at each recoil returned again;
two more were sent for one foe slain.

New hope was cowed, all rebels killed;
quenched were the fires, the songs were stilled, tree felled, heath burned, and through the waste marched the black host of Orcs in haste.

Almost they closed their ring of steel round Beren; hard upon his heel now trod their spies; within their hedge 545 of all aid shorn, upon the edge of death at bay he stood aghast and knew that he must die at last, or flee the land of Barahir, his land beloved. Beside the mere 550 beneath a heap of nameless stones must crumble those once mighty bones, forsaken by both son and kin, bewailed by reeds of Aeluin.

In winter's night the houseless North 555 he left behind, and stealing forth the leaguer of his watchful foe he passed – a shadow on the snow, a swirl of wind, and he was gone,
the ruin of Dorthonion, 560 Tarn Aeluin and its water wan, never again to look upon.
No more shall hidden bowstring sing,
no more his shaven arrows wing, no more his hunted head shall lie 565
upon the heath beneath the sky.
The Northern stars, whose silver fire of old Men named the Burning Briar,
were set behind his back, and shone o'er land forsaken: he was gone. 570

Southward he turned, and south away

his long and lonely journey lay, while ever loomed before his path
 the dreadful peaks of Gorgorath.
 Never had foot of man most bold 575
 yet trod those mountains steep and cold, nor climbed upon their sudden brink, whence, sickened, eyes must turn and shrink to see their southward cliffs fall sheer
 in rocky pinnacle and pier 580 down into shadows that were laid before the sun and moon were made.
 In valleys woven with deceit
 and washed with waters bitter-sweet dark magic lurked in gulf and glen; 585 but out away beyond the ken of mortal sight the eagle's eye from dizzy towers that pierced the sky might grey and gleaming see afar, as sheen on water under star, 590
 Beleriand, Beleriand,
 the borders of the Elven-land.

4. OF THE COMING OF BEREN TO DORIATH; BUT FIRST IS TOLD OF THE MEETING OF MELIAN AND THINGOL

There long ago in Elder-days ere voice was heard or trod were ways, the haunt of silent shadows stood 595
 in starlit dusk Nan Elmoth wood.
 In Elder-days that long are gone
 a light amid the shadows shone,

a voice was in the silence heard:
the sudden singing of a bird. 600

There Melian came, the Lady grey,
and dark and long her tresses lay beneath her silver girdle-seat
and down unto her silver feet.
The nightingales with her she brought, 605 to whom their song herself she taught, who sweet upon her gleaming hands had sung in the immortal lands.

Thence wayward wandering on a time from Lórien she dared to climb 610 the everlasting mountain-wall of Valinor, at whose feet fall the surges of the Shadowy Sea.
Out away she went then free, to gardens of the Gods no more 615 returning, but on mortal shore, a glimmer ere the dawn she strayed, singing her spells from glade to glade.

A bird in dim Nan Elmoth wood trilled, and to listen Thingol stood 620 amazed; then far away he heard a voice more fair than fairest bird, a voice as crystal clear of note as thread of silver glass remote.

Here the manuscript C ends. Of the next short section there are no less than five rough drafts, with endless small variations of wording (and the first ten lines of it were written onto the B-text). The final form was then added, in type, to the D typescript:

Of folk and kin no more he thought; 625 of errand that the Eldar brought from Cuiviénen far away, of lands beyond the Seas that lay no more he recked, forgetting all, drawn only by that distant call 630 till deep in dim Nan Elmoth wood lost and beyond recall he stood.
And there he saw her, fair and fay:
Ar-Melian, the Lady grey,
as silent as the windless trees, 635 standing with mist about her knees, and in her face remote the light of Lórien glimmered in the night.
No word she spoke; but pace by pace,
a halting shadow, towards her face 640 forth walked the silver-mantled king, tall Elu Thingol. In the ring of waiting trees he took her hand.
One moment face to face they stand alone, beneath the wheeling sky, 645 while starlit years on earth go by and in Nan Elmoth wood the trees grow dark and tall. The murmuring seas rising and falling on the shore and Ulmo's horn he heeds no more. 650

But long his people sought in vain their lord, till Ulmo called again, and then in grief they marched away, leaving the woods. To havens grey upon the western shore, the last 655

long shore of mortal lands, they passed, and thence were borne beyond the Sea in Aman, the Blessed Realm, to be by evergreen Ezellohar in Valinor, in Eldamar.

660

- 52 On one of the copies of D Dungorthin was changed to Dungortheb, but this belongs to a later layer of nomenclature and I have not introduced it into the text.
- 55 Taur-nu-Fuin C: the line as written on the B-text still had Taur-na-Fuin.
- 140 Bëor's son: changed on one of the copies of D to the Bëoring, i.e. a man of Bëor's house. This was a change made when the genealogy had been greatly extended and Barahir was no longer Bëor's son but his remote descendant (see p. 198).
- 249– In this section of the Canto the rewriting on (or 330 inserted into) the B-text exists in two versions, one the immediate forerunner of the other. The difference between them is that in the earlier Gorlim was still, as in the earlier Lay, taken to Angband and to Morgoth himself. Thus the passage in the first rewriting corresponding to lines 255–66 reads:
to Angband and the iron halls where laboured Morgoth's hopeless thralls;

and there with bonds on hand and foot to grievous torment he was put

In what follows the two versions are the same, except that in the first it is Morgoth, not Sauron: precisely the same lines are used of each. But at lines 306–11 the first version has:

Then Gorlim wavered, and he drew half back; but Morgoth's daunting eyes there held him. To the Lord of Lies 'tis vain in lies the breath to spend:
as he began, so he must end, and all must answer as he could and at lines 318–21 Morgoth says:

Thou fool! A phantom thou didst see that Sauron my servant made to snare thy lovesick wits. Naught else was there.
Cold 'tis with Sauron's wraiths to wed!

547 The word aghost is marked with an X in C (because Beren was not aghost).

567– At first the passage in B (p. 167, lines 8 369–82) beginning No more his hidden bowstring sings was scarcely changed in the rewriting, but as first written C had (old lines 376–9):

found him no more. The stars that burn
about the North with silver fire that Varda wrought, the Burning Briar as Men it called in days long gone

Old lines 373–5 were then cut out and 376–9 rewritten:

The stars that burn with silver fire about the North, the Burning Briar that Varda lit in ages gone

This was in turn changed to the text

- given, lines 567–8.
- 581 In one of the copies of D an X is placed against this line. I think this was probably very late and marks my father's changed ideas concerning the making of the Sun and Moon.
- 596 Nan Elmoth: in the preliminary draft the name of the wood was first Glad-uial, emended to Glath-uial; then Gilammoth, emended to Nan Elmoth. It was here that the name Nan Elmoth emerged.
- 627 In one of the drafts of this passage the line is from Waking Water far away.
- 634 In one of the drafts of this passage Tar-Melian stands in the margin as an alternative.

Commentary on lines 1–660

A strictly chronological account of the evolution of the legends of the Elder Days would have to consider several other works before the revisions to the Lay of Leithian were reached. By treating the Lay revised and unrevised as an entity and not piecemeal I jump these stages, and names which had in fact emerged a good while before appear here for the first time in this 'History'. I do little more than list them:

- 65 Menegroth
- 89 elanor and niphredil. At line 125 is a reference to the golden elanor.
- 115 Middle-earth
- 149 The names of the men of Barahir's band, beside
ff. Beren and Gorlim: Dagnir, Ragnor, Radhruin, Dairuin, Gildor, Urthel, Arthad, Hathaldir, Belegund and Baragund.
Belegund and Baragund are the sons of Bregolas (Barahir's brother); and Gorlim is the son of Angrim (199).
All these names appear in The Silmarillion (pp. 155, 162).
- 161 'the fen of reedy Serech.' Beren came on the Orcs at the well of Rivil, which 'rises from the fell/down into Serech's reeds to flow' (434–5).
- 162 Felagund is called Inglor (Inglor Felagund in the sub-title, p. 335).
- 182, Dorthonion
560
- 186 Elbereth
- 196, (Tarn) Aeluin
etc.
- 255, Sauron
etc.
- 259, Gaurhoth. Cf. Tol-in-Gaurhoth 'Isle of Werewolves' in The Silmarillion.
- 347
- 434 Rivil
- 493 Hador

- 512 Dagmor. Beren's sword is named nowhere else.
- 519 Gorgol the Butcher. He is named nowhere else.
- 520 Ladros (the lands to the north-east of Dorthonion that were granted by the Noldorin kings to the Men of the House of Bëor).
- 520 Drûn. This name is marked on the later of the 'Silmarillion' maps (that on which the published map was based) as north of Aeluin and west of Ladros, but is named in no other place.
- 574 Gorgorath. This has occurred in the prose outline for Canto X of the Lay, but in the form Gorgoroth (p. 272).
- 596,
etc. Nan Elmoth. See note to line 596.
- 634 Ar-Melian (Tar-Melian). The name is not found elsewhere with either prefix.
- 659 Ezellohar (the Green Mound of the Two Trees in Valinor).

In addition may be noted here Dungorthin (52), where the new version changes the old lines 49-50

To North there lay the Land of Dread whence only evil pathways led
to

To North there lay a land of dread,
Dungorthin where all ways were dead

In the old version 'the Land of Dread' clearly meant, simply, 'the land of Morgoth'. Here Dungorthin is placed as it is in The Silmarillion (p. 121), between the Mountains of Terror and the northern bound of the Girdle of Melian; see p. 314.

In the revised Lay the story of Gorlim was greatly developed. In the old (see pp. 162-4, 169-70), Gorlim left his companions and went 'to meet/with hidden friend within a dale'; he found 'a homestead looming pale', and within it he saw a phantom of Eilinel. He left the house, in fear of Morgoth's hunters and wolves, and returned to his companions; but after some days he deliberately sought out Morgoth's servants and offered to betray his fellows. He was taken to the halls of Morgoth – who does not say that the wraith was set to decoy Gorlim:

a wraith of that which might have been,
methinks, it is that thou hast seen!

(But in lines 241-2 it is said that 'men believed that Morgoth made/the fiendish phantom'.)

There is also a remarkable development in the revised Lay, in that 'the XII Bëorings' (one would expect XIII, including Barahir himself) of Dorthonion were the very men who saved King Felagund in the Battle of Sudden Flame:

For these it was, the chosen men
of Bëor's house, who in the fen
of reedy Serech stood at bay
about King Inglor in the day of his defeat ...

(159-63)

In The Silmarillion the story is that 'Morgoth pursued [Barahir] to the death, until at last there remained to him only twelve companions' (p. 162): there is no suggestion that these survivors were a picked band, already joined as companions in an earlier heroic deed.

Felagund (Inglor) is now said to have returned to Nargothrond (lines 166–7) after his rescue by Barahir and his men (see pp. 85–6).

From this point onwards substantial rewriting of the poem is restricted to a few sections.

Canto III continued

From the end of the rewritten opening of the poem (line 660 above) the D typescript continues as a copy of B to the end of the poem, but though it was certainly made under my father's supervision it is of very minor textual value in itself.

The passage in the original text (p. 173) lines 453 (Thus Thingol sailed not on the seas) to 470 was left unchanged; but for lines 471 (In later days when Morgoth first) to approximately 613 my father substituted 142 lines of new verse (omitting the long retrospective passage lines 563 ff. concerning Beren's journey over the Mountains of Terror), in which there is very little of the old Lay, and as the passage proceeds progressively less. There is no doubt that these lines are (relatively) very late: an apparently contemporaneous piece of rewriting in Canto X is certainly post-1955 (see p. 360), and they may well be considerably later than that. There is a quantity of rough draft material in manuscript, but also a typescript made by my father of the first 103 lines, inserted into the D-text.

In later days, when Morgoth fled from wrath and raised once more his head and Iron Crown, his mighty seat beneath the smoking mountain's feet founded and fortified anew, 5 then slowly dread and darkness grew:

the Shadow of the North that all the Folk of Earth would hold in thrall.

The lords of Men to knee he brings, the kingdoms of the Exiled Kings 10 assails with ever-mounting war:
in their last havens by the shore they dwell, or strongholds walled with fear defend upon his borders drear, till each one falls. Yet reign there still 15
in Doriath beyond his will
the Grey King and immortal Queen.
No evil in their realm is seen;
no power their might can yet surpass:
there still is laughter and green grass, 20
there leaves are lit by the white sun, and many marvels are begun.

There went now in the Guarded Realm beneath the beech, beneath the elm, there lightfoot ran now on the green 25
the daughter of the king and queen :
of Arda's eldest children born in beauty of their elven-morn and only child ordained by birth to walk in raiment of the Earth 30 from Those descended who began before the world of Elf and Man.

Beyond the bounds of Arda far still shone the Legions, star on star, memorials of their labour long,	35 achievement of Vision and of Song; and when beneath their ancient light on Earth below was cloudless night, music in Doriath awoke, and there beneath the branching oak, or seated on the beech-leaves brown, Daeron the dark with ferny crown played on his pipes with elvish art unbearable by mortal heart.	40
No other player has there been, no other lips or fingers seen so skilled, 'tis said in elven-lore, save Maelor* son of Fëanor, forgotten harper, singer doomed, who young when Laurelin yet bloomed to endless lamentation passed and in the tombless sea was cast.†	45 50
But Daeron in his heart's delight yet lived and played by starlit night, until one summer-eve befell, as still the elven harpers tell. Then merrily his piping trilled; the grass was soft, the wind was stilled, the twilight lingered faint and cool in shadow-shapes upon the pool‡	55 60 beneath the boughs of sleeping trees standing silent. About their knees a mist of hemlocks glimmered pale, and ghostly moths on lace-wings frail went to and fro. Beside the mere 65 quickenings, rippling, rising clear the piping called. Then forth she came, as sheer and sudden as a flame of peerless white the shadows cleaving, her maiden-bower on white feet leaving; 70 and as when summer stars arise radiant into darkened skies, her living light on all was cast in fleeting silver as she passed.

There now she stepped with elven pace, 75 bending and swaying in her grace, as half-reluctant; then began to dance, to dance: in mazes ran bewildering, and a mist of white was wreathed about her whirling flight. 80 Wind-ripples on the water flashed, and trembling leaf and flower were plashed with diamond-dews, as ever fleet and fleeter went her wingéd feet.

Her long hair as a cloud was streaming 85 about her arms uplifted gleaming, as slow above the trees the Moon in glory of the plenilune arose, and on the open glade its light serene and clear was laid. 90
Then suddenly her feet were stilled, and through the woven wood there thrilled, half wordless, half in elven-tongue, her voice upraised in blissful song that once of nightingales she learned 95

and in her living joy had turned to heart-enthralling loveliness, unmarred, immortal, sorrowless.

Ir Ithil ammen Eruchín
menel-vîr síla díriel 100 si loth a galadh lasto dân!
A Hîr Annûn gilthoniel, le linnon im Tinúviel!

The typescript ends here, but the final manuscript draft continues:

O elven-fairest Lúthien
what wonder moved thy dances then? 105
That night what doom of Elvenesse enchanted did thy voice possess?
Such marvel shall there no more be on Earth or west beyond the Sea, at dusk or dawn, by night or noon 110 or neath the mirror of the moon!
On Neldoreth was laid a spell;
the piping into silence fell,
for Daeron cast his flute away, unheeded on the grass it lay, 115 in wonder bound as stone he stood heart-broken in the listening wood.
And still she sang above the night,
as light returning into light upsoaring from the world below 120 when suddenly there came a slow dull tread of heavy feet on leaves, and from the darkness on the eaves of the bright glade a shape came out with hands agrope, as if in doubt	125 or blind, and as it stumbling passed under the moon a shadow cast bended and darkling. Then from on high as lark falls headlong from the sky

the song of Lúthien fell and ceased;	130
but Daeron from the spell released awoke to fear, and cried in woe: ‘Flee Lúthien, ah Lúthien go!
An evil walks the wood! Away!’
Then forth he fled in his dismay	135 ever calling her to follow him, until far off his cry was dim ‘Ah flee, ah flee now, Lúthien!’
But silent stood she in the glen unmoved, who never fear had known,	140
as slender moonlit flower alone, white and windless with upturned face waiting

Here the manuscript comes to an end.

Canto IV

A small section of this Canto was partly rewritten at some late date. Lines 884 ff. were changed to:

Then Thingol said: ‘O Dairon wise, with wary ears and watchful eyes, who all that passes in this land dost ever heed and understand,

what omen doth this silence bear?

This was written rapidly on the B-text and was primarily prompted, I think, by the wish to get rid of the word 'magic' at line 886, which is underlined and marked with an X on the D typescript. At the same time 'wild stallion' at 893 was changed to 'great stallion', and Tavros to Tauros at 891. A little further on, lines 902-19 were changed, also at this time:

beneath the trees of Ennorath.*
Would it were so! An age now hath gone by since Nahar trod this earth in days of our peace and ancient mirth, ere rebel lords of Eldamar pursuing Morgoth from afar brought war and ruin to the North.
Doth Tauros to their aid come forth?
But if not he, who comes or what?'
And Dairon said: 'He cometh not!
No feet divine shall leave that shore
where the Outer Seas' last surges roar,
till many things be come to pass,
and many evils wrought. Alas!
the guest is here. The woods are still,
but wait not; for a marvel chill
them holds at the strange deeds they see,
though king sees not - yet queen, maybe,
can guess, and maiden doubtless knows who ever now beside her goes.'

Lines 926-9 were rewritten:

But Dairon looked on Lúthien's face and faltered, seeing his disgrace in those clear eyes. He spoke no more, and silent Thingol's anger bore.

But these rewritings were hasty, at the level of rough draft, and in no way comparable to what has preceded.

Cantos V-IX

There is no later recasting in these Cantos save for four lines in Canto IX: the dying words of Felagund to Beren (2633 ff.):

I now must go to my long rest in Aman, there beyond the shore of Eldamar for ever more in memory to dwell.' Thus died the king, as still the elven harpers sing.

At this point my father wrote on one of the copies of the D-text: 'He should give ring back to Beren' (for the later history of the ring see Unfinished Tales p. 171 note 2, and The Lord of the Rings Appendix A, III. 322 note 1 and 338). But in fact it is nowhere said that Beren had returned the ring to Felagund.

Canto X

With the beginning of this Canto a substantial passage of new writing begins, at first written on the B-text, and then, with further change, in a typescript made by my father, to all appearance at the same time as that given on pp. 352-5 (but in this case the new verse was retyped as part of the D-text).

Songs have recalled, by harpers sung long years ago in elven tongue,
how Lúthien and Beren strayed
in Sirion's vale; and many a glade
they filled with joy, and there their feet 5
passed by lightly, and days were sweet.
Though winter hunted through the wood,
still flowers lingered where they stood.
Tinúviel! Tinúviel!
Still unafraid the birds now dwell 10 and sing on boughs amid the snow where Lúthien and Beren go.

From Sirion's Isle they passed away, but on the hill alone there lay a green grave, and a stone was set, 15
and there there lie the white bones yet
of Finrod fair, Finarfin's son, unless that land be changed and gone,
or foundered in unfathomed seas,
while Finrod walks beneath the trees 20 in Eldamar* and comes no more to the grey world of tears and war.

To Nargothrond no more he came
but thither swiftly ran the fame of their dead king and his great deed, 25 how Lúthien the Isle had freed:
the Werewolf Lord was overthrown, and broken were his towers of stone.
For many now came home at last
who long ago to shadow passed; 30

and like a shadow had returned Huan the hound, though scant he earned or praise or thanks of Celegorm.

There now arose a growing storm, a clamour of many voices loud, 35 and folk whom Curufin had cowed and their own king had help denied, in shame and anger now they cried:
'Come! Slay these faithless lords untrue!
Why lurk they here? What will they do, 40 but bring Finarfin's kin to naught, treacherous cuckoo-guests unsought?
Away with them!' But wise and slow Orodreth spoke: 'Beware, lest woe and wickedness to worse ye bring! 45 Finrod is fallen. I am king.
But even as he would speak, I now command you. I will not allow in Nargothrond the ancient curse from evil unto evil worse 50 to work. With tears for Finrod weep repentant! Swords for Morgoth keep!
No kindred blood shall here be shed.
Yet here shall neither rest nor bread the brethren find who set at naught 55 Finarfin's house. Let them be sought, unharm'd to stand before me! Go!
The courtesy of Finrod show!'

In scorn stood Celegorm, unbowed, with glance of fire in anger proud 60 and menacing; but at his side smiling and silent, wary-eyed, was Curufin, with hand on haft of his long knife. And then he laughed and 'Well?' said he. 'Why didst thou call 65 for us, Sir Steward? In thy hall we are not wont to stand. Come, speak, if aught of us thou hast to seek!'

Cold words Orodreth answered slow:
'Before the king ye stand. But know, 70 of you he seeks for naught. His will ye come to hear, and to fulfil.
Be gone for ever, ere the day
shall fall into the sea! Your way shall never lead you hither more, 75
nor any son of Fëanor;
of love no more shall there be bond between your house and Nargothrond!'

'We will remember it,' they said,
and turned upon their heels, and sped, 80
saddled their horses, trussed their gear, and went with hound and bow and spear, alone; for none of all the folk would follow them. No word they spoke, but sounded horns, and rode away 85 like wind at end of stormy day.

The typescript made by my father ends here, but the revision written on the B-text continues (and was incorporated in the D typescript).

Towards Doriath the wanderers now were drawing nigh. Though bare was bough,

 and winter through the grasses grey went hissing chill, and brief was day, 90
 they sang beneath the frosty sky
 above them lifted clear and high.
 They came to Mindeb swift and bright that from the northern mountains' height to Neldoreth came leaping down 95 with noise among the boulders brown, but into sudden silence fell, passing beneath the guarding spell that Melian on the borders laid of Thingol's land. There now they stayed; 100 for silence sad on Beren fell.
 Unheeded long, at last too well he heard the warning of his heart:
 alas, beloved, here we part.
 'Alas, Tinúviel,' he said, 105
 'this road no further can we tread together, no more hand in hand can journey in the Elven-land.'
 'Why part we here? What dost thou say, even at dawn of brighter day ?' 110

From lines 2936 to 2965 no further changes were made (except Elfinesse to Elvenesse at 2962). In the preceding passage, Inglor Felagund son of Finrod has become Finrod Felagund son of Finarfin, which dates the revision to, at earliest, 1955, for the change had not been made in the first edition of The Lord of the Rings.

A further short stretch of rewriting begins at 2966, returning to the original text two lines later:

My word, alas! I now must keep,
and not the first of men must weep for oath in pride and anger sworn.
Too brief the meeting, brief the morn, too soon comes night when we must part! 5
All oaths are for breaking of the heart, with shame denied, with anguish kept.
Ah! would that now unknown I slept with Barahir beneath the stone, and thou wert dancing still alone, 10
unmarred, immortal, sorrowless, singing in joy of Elvenesse.'

'That may not be. For bonds there are stronger than stone or iron bar, more strong than proudly spoken oath. 15
Have I not plighted thee my troth?
Hath love no pride nor honour then?
Or dost thou deem then Lúthien so frail of purpose, light of love?
By stars of Elbereth above! 20
If thou wilt here my hand forsake and leave me lonely paths to take,
then Lúthien will not go home ...

At the same time line 2974 was changed to beyond all hope in love once more and 2988 ff. to

In rage and haste
thus madly eastward they now raced,

to find the old and perilous path between the dreadful Gorgorath and Thingol's realm. That was their road most swift to where their kin abode far off, where Himring's watchful hill o'er Aglon's gorge hung tall and still.

They saw the wanderers. With a shout straight on them turned their steeds about
...

Cantos XI-XIII

There is no rewriting in Cantos XI and XII, but a little towards the end of XIII. Lines 4092-5 were replaced by:

the Silmarils with living light were kindled clear, and waxing bright shone like the stars that in the North above the reek of earth leap forth.

Lines 4150-9 were replaced by:

In claws of iron the gem was caught;
the knife them rent, as they were naught but brittle nails on a dead hand.
Behold! the hope of Elvenland, the fire of Fëanor, Light of Morn before the sun and moon were born, thus out of bondage came at last,
from iron to mortal hand it passed.
There Beren stood. The jewel he held,

and its pure radiance slowly welled	10 through flesh and bone, and turned to fire with hue of living blood. Desire then smote his heart their doom to dare, and from the deeps of Hell to bear
all three immortal gems, and save	15
the elven-light from Morgoth's grave.
Again he stooped; with knife he strove;
through band and claw of iron it clove.
But round the Silmarils dark Fate was woven: they were meshed in hate,	20 and not yet come was their doomed hour when wrested from the fallen power of Morgoth in a ruined world, regained and lost, they should be hurled in fiery gulf and groundless sea,	25 beyond recall while Time shall be.

Canto XIV

Lines 4184-90 were rewritten:

At last before them far away
they saw a glimmer, faint and grey of ghostly light that shivering fell down from the yawning gates of Hell.
Then hope awoke, and straightway died –
the doors were open, gates were wide;
but on the threshold terror walked.

{ The dreadful wolf awake there stalked } { The wolf awake there watchful stalked } and in his eyes the red fire glowered;

there Carcharoth in menace towered,
a waiting death, a biding doom:

Lines 4208–11 were rewritten:

and Beren in despair then strode past Lúthien to bar the road, unarmed, defenceless, to defend the elven-maid until the end.

Of the original Lay scarcely more than a sixth is represented in the rewriting, and the proportion of new verse to old is less than a quarter; so that Humphrey Carpenter's statement in The Inklings, p. 31, that 'Eventually, indeed, he came to rewrite the whole poem' must, alas, be corrected.

Note on the original submission of the Lay of Leithian and The Silmarillion in 1937

In the wake of the immediate success of The Hobbit, which was published on 21 September 1937, Stanley Unwin, the chairman of George Allen & Unwin, was naturally anxious that my father should produce a sequel or successor – about hobbits. The result of the first meeting between them, not long after the publication of the book, was that my father sent in various manuscripts, among them the Lay of Leithian (referred to in the correspondence of that time as the Gest(e) of Beren and Lúthien) and The Silmarillion.

Humphrey Carpenter says in his Biography (p. 183) that ‘the manuscript [of The Silmarillion] – or rather, the bundle of manuscripts – had arrived in a somewhat disordered state, and the only clearly continuous section seemed to be the long poem “The Gest of Beren and Lúthien”.’ Rayner Unwin has told me that in the record kept by Allen & Unwin of incoming manuscripts the works delivered on 15 November 1937 were listed as:

- 1 Farmer Giles of Ham
- 2 Long Poem
- 3 Mr Bliss
- 4 The Gnomes Material
- 5 The Lost Road

Notes of my father’s show that together with The Silmarillion ‘proper’ he sent at this time Ainulindalë (The Music of the Ainur), Ambarkanta (The Shape of the World), and The Fall of the Númenoreans. I think that this is why the fourth item in the record book was written down as ‘The Gnomes Material’. It may be that the different manuscripts were not very clearly differentiated, while the title-pages of the different works would certainly seem obscure; and 'The Gnomes Material' was a convenient covering phrase.* But perhaps one may detect in it a note of helplessness as well, apparent also in the description of item 2 as a 'Long Poem'. – On the other hand, it should be mentioned that the text of The Silmarillion was at that time a fine, simple, and very legible manuscript.

There is no evidence that The Silmarillion and the other Middle-earth prose works were submitted to the publishers' reader. In his report on the poem he referred only to 'a few pages' and 'some pages' in prose, and Stanley Unwin, when he returned the manuscripts on 15 December 1937, mentioned 'the pages of a prose version' which accompanied the poem. Humphrey Carpenter seems certainly right in his suggestion (Biography p. 184) that these pages were attached 'for the purpose of completing the story, for the poem itself was unfinished'; they were pages from the story of Beren and Lúthien as told in The Silmarillion. But it is also obvious from the reader's report that he saw nothing else of The Silmarillion. He headed his report: 'The Geste of Beren and Lúthien (Retold in Verse by ?)', and began:

I am rather at a loss to know what to do with this – it doesn't even seem to have an author! – or any indication of sources, etc. Publishers' readers are rightly supposed to be of moderate intelligence and reading; but I confess my reading has not extended to early Celtic Gestes, and I don't even know whether this is a famous Geste or not, or, for that matter, whether it is authentic. I presume it is, as the unspecified versifier has included some pages of a prose-version (which is far superior).

By the last sentence he meant, I think, that the story, as represented in what he took to be a close prose translation, was authentic 'Celtic Geste', and that 'the unspecified versifier' had proceeded to make a poem out of it.

However, he was a critic positive in his taste, and he contrasted the poem, greatly to its disadvantage, with 'the few pages of (presumably) prose transcript from the original'. In the poem, he said, 'the primitive strength is gone, the clear colours are gone' – a notable conclusion, even if the actual evolution of the Matter of Beren and Lúthien was thus turned onto its head.

It may seem odd that the reader who was given the poem should have had so little to go on; even odder, that he wrote with some enthusiasm about the fragment of prose narrative that accompanied it, yet never saw the work from which the fragment came, though that was the most important manuscript sent in by the author: he had indeed no reason to suspect its existence. But I would guess that my father had not made it sufficiently clear at the outset what the Middle-earth prose works were and how they related to each other, and that as a result 'the Gnomes Material' had been set aside as altogether too peculiar and difficult.

At the bottom of the reader's report Charles Furth of Allen & Unwin wrote: 'What do we do?'; and it was left to the tact of Stanley Unwin to devise a way. When he returned the manuscripts to my father he said:

As you yourself surmised, it is going to be a difficult task to do anything with the Geste of Beren and Lúthien in verse form, but our reader is much impressed with the pages of a prose version that accompanied it – and he quoted from the report only the approving (if misdirected) remarks which the reader had made about the Silmarillion fragment, and which Humphrey Carpenter quotes – 'It has something of that mad, bright-eyed beauty that perplexes all Anglo-Saxons in the face of Celtic art,' &c. But Stanley Unwin then went on to say:

The Silmarillion contains plenty of wonderful material; in fact it is a mine to be explored in writing further books like The Hobbit rather than a book in itself.

These words effectively show in themselves that The Silmarillion had not been given to a reader and reported on. At that time it was an extremely coherent work, though unfinished in that version.* Beyond question, Stanley Unwin's object was to save my father's feelings, while (relying on the reader's report – which concerned the poem) rejecting the material submitted, and to persuade him to write a book that would continue the success of The Hobbit. But the result was that my father was entirely misled; for in his reply of 16 December 1937 (given in full in Letters pp. 26–7) – three days before he wrote saying that he had completed the first chapter, 'A Long-expected Party', of 'a new story about Hobbits' – he said:

My chief joy comes from learning that the Silmarillion is not rejected with scorn ... I do not mind about the verse-form [i.e. the verse-form of the tale of Beren and Lúthien, the Lay of Leithian] which in spite of certain virtuous passages has grave defects, for it is only for me the rough material.† But I shall certainly now hope one day to be able, or to be able to afford, to publish the Silmarillion!

He was quite obviously under the impression that The Silmarillion had been given to a reader and reported on (no doubt he saw no significance in Stanley Unwin's phrase 'the pages of a prose version'); whereas so far as the existing evidence goes (and it seems sufficiently complete) this was not the case at all. He thought it had been read and rejected, whereas it had merely been rejected. The reader had certainly rejected the Lay of Leithian; he had not rejected The Silmarillion, of which he had only seen a few pages (not knowing what they were), and in any case enjoyed them – granting the difficulties that an Anglo-Saxon finds in appreciating Celtic art.

It is strange to reflect on what the outcome might conceivably have been if The Silmarillion actually had been read at that time, and if the reader had maintained the good opinion he formed from those few pages; for while there is no necessary reason to suppose even so that it would have been accepted for publication, it does not seem absolutely out of the question. And if it had been? My father wrote long after (in 1964, Letters p. 346):

I then [after the publication of The Hobbit] offered them the legends of the Elder Days, but their readers turned that down. They wanted a sequel. But I wanted heroic legends and high romance. The result was The Lord of the Rings.

GLOSSARY OF OBSOLETE, ARCHAIC, AND RARE WORDS AND MEANINGS

In this list words occurring in the Lay of the Children of Húrin (H, and the second version H ii) and in the Lay of Leithian (L, and the continuous part of the later rewriting L ii) are referenced to the lines; words from other poems or passages are referenced to the pages on which they occur.

Both Lays, but especially The Children of Húrin, make use of some totally lost words (and lost meanings), but the list includes also a good many that remain well-known literary archaisms, and some words that are neither but are of very limited currency.

an if, H 63, 485

as as if, H 310, ii. 659

astonied astounded, H 578 bade H ii. 646. If This Thingol she bade means 'This she offered to Thingol' the word is used in two senses within the line: she bade (offered) him the helm, and bade (asked) him to receive her thanks'; but more probably the line means 'she asked him to receive it, and her thanks' (cf. H 301).

bale evil, woe, torment, H 56, ii. 81 balusters the pillars of a balustrade, p. 132

bated restrained, held in, H 1121 bent open place covered with grass, H 1032, 1517, 1539, ii. 500; L 1369, 2281

betid come to pass, L 2408

blent mingled, H 453, 583; L ii. 317

boots in it boots not, it is of no use, H 1871

bosmed (in bare-bosmed) bosomed, H 1198 brand blade, sword, H 1340, ii. 149 carping talk, chatter, H 477; carped H 506 casque helmet, H ii. 655 chaplet garland, L 753

chase hunting-grounds, L 3297
clomb old past tense of climb, H 1494; L 1382, 3872 corse corpse, H 1295, 1404; L 3620 cozening beguiling or defrauding, p. 305 croft enclosed plot of arable land, L 1968 dear precious, valuable, H 480 dolour suffering, L 2814 dolven (also in dark(ly)-, deep-dolven) delved, dug, H 2052; L 213, 1677, ii. 63 dreed endured, suffered, H 531 drouth (the same word in origin as drought) dryness, H 946, 972; (plains of, fields of) drouth, thirst, H 826; L 2047
eld old age, H ii. 595; of eld, of old, H 118, ii. 262 enfurled (in mist-enfurled) enveloped, swathed (in something twisted or folded), L 59, ii. 61. The word is not recorded with the prefix en-. Cf. furled, wrapped, L 1551, unfurled, opened out, L 404, 1591, 3986 enow enough, L 1304
error (probably) wandering, H ii. 495 fain gladly, H 130; L 823; glad, L ii. 368; fain of eager for, or well-pleased with, H 410, 458, ii. 786; warfain eager for war, H 386, 1664, ii. 137, bloodfain ii. 750; I had fainer I would like it better, H ii. 146 falchion (broad) sword, H 1217, ii. 63, 146 fallow golden brown, H 2106; pp. 128-9; fallow-gold p. 129; fallow deer L 86. (A distinct word from fallow of ground.) fare journeying, H 2184 fast fixedly, unmovingly, H 1614 (or perhaps adjective qualifying pondering, deep, unbroken, cf. fast asleep); secure against attack, L 360 fell hide, L 2344, 3398, 3458, 3484, 3941, 4124, ii. 528 fey death-bound, L 3305; see unfey. flittermouse bat, L 4074

fold land, H 765; folds H 533, 1632 probably the same, but perhaps 'windings', force waterfall, H 1595 forhungered starved, L 3076 forwandered worn out by wandering, H 190, 897, ii. 498; L 550, 2354
freshets small streams of fresh water, H 1597; L 1934 frith wood, woodland, H 1795; p. 132; L 896, 2264, ii. 124 frore frosty, H ii. 594; very cold, L 578, 1718 garth enclosed ground beside a house, garden, yard, H 149, ii. 313 ghyll deep rocky ravine, H 1498 glaive lance, or sword, H 322, 1210, ii. 680 glamoury magic, enchantment, pp. 122-3; L 2073 gloam twilight, p. 146 grasses plants, herbs, L 3122 guerdon recompense, H 658; L 222, 1064, 4139 haggard (of clothes) ragged, disordered, H 466; (of hills) wild, H 2120, L 3167; modern meaning H 1890, L 3720 (in transferred sense, haggard hunger, haggard care H 1437, L 564) haled drew, pulled out, H ii. 551 hap fortune, lot, condition, H 340 hest command, H 86, 689 hie hasten, H 838
hight called, named, H 366, 863 hold fastness, stronghold, L 52, 1702, 2457; p. 134 (or perhaps 'grasp'); refuge, L 210 holt wood, copse, L 2342 inane empty, void, L 3533 keep central part of the stronghold, L 1677 lambent of flame, playing on a surface without burning, H 1217 lapped hemmed in, H 690; enfolded, H 709 lea grassland, H 35, 1797, ii. 66

leasows meadows, H 1797 leeches physicians, L 3055, 3144 let hinder, L 2019
levin lightning, H 1681
lief willing, L 3417; liever better, more delightful, H 78 like please, H 90, 286, 598, 1376, ii. 226, 626 (but 'like' H 616) lind linden, lime-tree, p. 120 loath hateful to, L 3419; unwilling, L 3417 lode path, road, H 798
louted bent, bowed, H 1520 march borderland, H ii. 493; L 3672 marge margin, H 1555
mavis song-thrush, L ii. 74 meed reward, requital, H 81, 268, 701, 793, ii. 195, 231, 604 meet fitting, H 487
mete deal out (used in the construction I shall mete thee a meed, his meed was meted) H 81, 532, 701, 1092, ii. 195 mews seagulls, p. 129; seamew H 1551 neb beak, bill, L 255, 570, ii. 381, 409 nesh soft, tender, L 4220 opes opens, L 3740; oped H 550 or ever before ever, L 1821 or ... or either ... or, H 439-40; L 54, 2886; p. 358 outer utter, uttermost (?), L 2979 palfrey small saddle-horse, L 3379 parlous perilous, dangerous, L ii. 456 pled old past tense of plead, L 2983 plenilune full moon, p. 354 prate chatter, talk to no purpose, H 501 quick living, alive, H ii. 78 quod (quoth), said, H 88
quook old past tense of quake, L 3582 recked cared, H 619; L ii. 629; unrecked unheeded, disregarded, H 1799

redeless without resource, devoid of counsel, L 3427

rive cleave, H 1211; past tense rove, L 4149 roamed wandered, went (of a path or journey), H 1432; extended (?) (of regions), H 1577. (These usages appear to be unrecorded.)

rout company, troop, band, L 2997 rove see rive.

ruel-bone some kind of ivory, L 2261 (cf. J. R. R. Tolkien, Sir Gawain, Pearl, and Sir Orfeo, translation of Pearl stanza 18: And her hue as rewel ivory wan).

ruth pity, compassion, H 306, 1941, 1969, 2134, ii. 654; L 116; remorse, H 509; sorrow, H 1661 shaws woods, thickets, H 647 (cf. the Trollshaws west of Rivendell).

sheer (of light) bright, L 689; (of water) clear and pure, L 1439

shoon old plural of shoe, L 490 shores supports, props, L 3880 sigaldry sorcery, L2072 (cf. stanza 3 of the poem Errantry, in J. R. R. Tolkien, The Adventures of Tom Bombadil, 1962).

slade valley, dell, H 235, 1150, 2171, ii. 561; slades of death H 685, 886 slot track, trail (of a hunted creature), H 745, 1314

slough mire, mud, H 881

sped availed (attained his purpose), H 41; prospered (transitive), H 247, (intransitive) ii. 574; pressed, urged on, H 284; sent with haste, H 654 stared (probably) shone, L 3132, a meaning of the verb found in the mediaeval alliterative poems: cf. J. R. R. Tolkien, Sir Gawain, Pearl, and Sir Orfeo, translation of Pearl stanza 10: stars stare in the welkin in winter night, where the original has staren with this meaning.

strikes runs, flows, H 240, 520, ii. 567

suage assuage, relieve, H 612 sued petitioned for, appealed for, H 857 swath 'the space covered by a sweep of the mower's scythe' (O.E.D.), H 33, ii. 64; L 2106

swinking toiling, H 784

sylphine of the nature of a sylph (spirit inhabiting the air, see p. 306), L 4077. (This adjective to sylph is not recorded.)

tale count, amount, sum, H 159, 471, ii. 326. Cf. untold uncounted, H ii. 678, L 12, 2251

targe shield, H 131, 409, 2153, ii. 284, 785

thewed in mighty-thewed, of great strength, with mighty sinews, H ii. 714

thirled pierced, H 697

tilth cultivated land, H 1798

tors rocky hill-tops, H 2119

travail hardship (as endured on a journey, i.e. both travail and travel), H 143, ii. 300 unfey not 'fey', not fated to die, H ii. 752 (or possibly the meaning is 'not feeble, not timid', reversing another sense of fey). This word is apparently not recorded in English, but ú-feigr 'unfey' is found in Old Norse, unkempt uncombed, H 490

unrecked see recked.

wading going, passing, H 1605 waiving refusing, rejecting, H ii. 154 wallet bag for provisions, H 228, ii. 551

wan dark, L 261, ii. 561

wanhope despair, H 188

web woven fabric, L 1471; used of ring-mail L 324, and of the 'weavings' of fate H ii. 13

weeds clothes, H 445

weft woven fabric, L 3061

weird fate, doom, H 160, ii. 119, 246, 327; L 2290, 3173

weregild the price to be paid in compensation for the killing of a man, varying according to his rank, L ii. 177

whin gorse, L ii. 195

wieldy (capable of easily wielding body or weapon), vigorous, agile, H 1765

wildered lost, H 188, 204, 1316, ii. 516; p. 146; bewildered, H 774; L 641 (see p. 323).

winding (1) of the motion of wind or water (without any necessary suggestion of twisting), H 769, 1857. (2) (of trumpet) blowing, H 1832 wist see wot.

wold forested hills or uplands (see p. 88), H 1816, 1992, 1994; L 1742

wolfham(e) wolfskin, L 3398; pp. 271-3, 283 (see p. 271).

woof woven fabric, L 4149

wot (present tense of verb wit), know, H 204, ii. 516; past tense wist knew, H 160, 200, 399, ii. 327; past participle unwist unknown, H 257

wrack (1) ruin, disaster, destruction, H 27, 629, 2036, ii. 120; p. 142. (2) seaweed, H 1569

wrights craftsmen, H 300, 1147, ii. 641, 671

SEARCHABLE TERMS

The page numbers in this index relate to the printed version of this book; they do not match the pages of your ebook. You can use your ebook reader's search tool to find a specific word or passage.

This index is made on the same lines as those to The Book of Lost Tales Parts I and II, and like them it is intended to provide (with only a few exceptions) complete references to all entries, and includes occasional references to passages where the person or place is not actually named. The note on the submission of the Lay of Leithian and The Silmarillion in 1937 is not indexed.

Ælfwine 28, 87, 140, 154, 182

Aeluin See Tarn Aeluin.

Agarwaen 'Blood-stained', name given by Túrin to himself in Nargothrond. 92

Aglon, Gorge of Between Taur-na-Fuin and Himling (Himring). 227, 235, 263, 272, 274, 310-11, 313, 361

Aiglir Angrin The Iron Mountains. 49. (Replaced Angorodin, replaced by Eiglir Engrin.)

Alqualondë 136. See Cópas Alqalunten, Kinslaying, Swanhaven.

Aman 348, 357. See Blessed Realm.

Amoury Unknown. 123

Anfauglith Another name of Dor-na-Fauglith. 273, 284

Angainor The great chain in which Morgoth was bound. 205, 208-10. Earlier forms Angaino, Angainu 209, Engainor 208

Angamandi Name of Angband in the Lost Tales. 282

Angband 7, 16, 32, 35, 49, 51, 53, 55, 69-70, 75, 87, 102, 107, 116, 126, 205, 209, 212, 220-1, 226, 231, 234, 244, 253, 257, 270-3, 279, (281-2), 283, 285, 289, 292-4, 298, 302, 304-7, 309, 314, 341, 348; described 294-6. Siege of Leaguer of Angband 55, 83-6, 171, 212-13, 221-2, 247. See Hells of Iron.
Angorodin Early name of the Iron Mountains. 49
Angrim Father of Gorlim the Unhappy. 336, 349
Angrod Son of Finrod/Finarfin, slain in the Battle of Sudden Flame. 80, 85, 138, 213, 222
Aragorn 124, 126, 269
Arda 138, 352
Ard-galen The great grassy northern plain, called after its desolation Anfauglith and Dor-na-Fauglith. 284
Ar-Melian Melian. 347, 350. See Tar-Melian.
Arminas Noldorin Elf who with Gelmir brought the warning of Ulmo to Nargothrond. 92
Arsiriand Rejected name for Beleriand. 160
Artanor Early name of Doriath. 27, 87, 125, 147-8, 270
Arthad One of the twelve companions of Barahir on Dorthonion. 335, 349 Arthurian legends 160
Aryador Name of Hithlum among Men. 29 athelas Herb of healing. 269
Aulë 137, 139

Balar, Isle and Bay of 183
Balrog(s) 7, 36-7, 70, 97-100, 102, 142, 281, 288, 296, 301, 303
Balthronding The bow of Beleg. 117, 127; later form Belthroning 26, 127 Ban Father of Blodrin the traitor. 48-9, 52. See Bor.
Bansil The White Tree of Valinor (Silpion, Telperion). 5, 73, 81-2, 195, 219. (Replaced by Belthil.)
Baragund Nephew and companion of Barahir and father of Morwen. 335, 349

Barahir Father of Beren (son of Bëor, 198, 334, 348). 25, 153, 161, 163-7, 170-1, 188, 190-1, 193, 198, 201, 213-14, 216, 220, 242, 245, 247, 249, 334-5, 337-43, 345, 348-9, 351, 360

Battle of Sudden Flame 83, 147, 171, 247, 284, 351; other references 55, 85, 221-2; described 212-13, 275

Battle of Unnumbered Tears 6, 11, 23-6, 59, 83-6, 92, 96, 111, 137, 146-7, 274, 310; field of tears 80, 85, (111). See Nínin Udathriol/Unothradin, Nirnaith Arnediad/Ornoth/Únoth.

Battle-under-Stars 87

Bauglir (1) Earlier name for Blodrin the traitor. 48-9, 52. (2) Name of Morgoth (replaced Belcha, Belegor, Melegor). 6-8, 10, 16, 21-2, 28, 41, 49, 52, 57, 59-61, 64-6, 84, 96, 98, 100, 116-17, 135, 168, 170, 182, 196, 211, 230, 282, 286-7

Baynes, Pauline (Map of Middle-earth) 26

Belaurien Rejected name for Beleriand. 160

Belaurin Gnomish form of Palúrien. 160

Belcha Name of Morgoth (replaced by Belegor, Melegor, Bauglir). 21-3, 52

Beleg 10-12, 16-17, 25-7, 30-51, 53-8, 60, 63-4, 76, 86, 89, 94, 110-12, 116-18, 127, 259, 311, 313-14; see especially 25-6, 127. In The Children of Húrin called the Huntsman, the Hunter, the Bowman. Túrin's elegy The Bowman's Friendship 64, 89, Laer Cú Beleg, the Song of the Great Bow, 89

Belegor Name of Morgoth (replacing Belcha, replaced by Melegor, Bauglir). 21

Belegost A city of the Dwarves. 44 (black Belegost), 306

Belegund Nephew and companion of Barahir. 335, 349

Beleriand 83, 152, 155, 157-8, 160, 166, 168-9, 184-5, 195, 222, 226-7, 236, 243, 297, 304, 331, 333, 346. (Replaced Broseliand; for other rejected names see 160)

Belthil The White Tree of Valinor (Silpion. Telperion). 5, 81-2, 192, 195, 210. (Replaced Bansil.)

Belthroning See Balthroning.

Bëor Father of Barahir. 198, 334, 348; Bëor's sons, Bëor's house 187, 335, 348, 350-1 Bëoring(s) Men of the house of Bëor. 335, 348, 351
Beowulf 127
Beren 9, 12-13, 22, 25, 52, 61, 87-9, 104, 106-10, 112, 114, 120-2, 124-6, 136, 138; passim in Lay of Leithian and commentaries. Beren as Man or Elf 25, 124-5, 171; his second life 125-6. See Ermabwed, Erchamion, Maglor (1).
Bilbo Baggins 49, 159
Bitter Hills Name of the Iron Mountains in the Lost Tales. 29
Bladorinand Rejected name for Beleriand. 160
Bladorwen 'The wide earth, Mother Earth', name of Palúrien. 160
Blasted Plain Dor-na-Faughlith. 49, 55
Blessed Realm Aman. 334, 348, 358; Blissful Realm(s) 72, 93, 132
Blodrin The Elf who betrayed Túrin's band (earlier named Bauglir). 31-3, 40, 48-9, 52
Blue Mountains Ered Luin. 160, 313; not named, 83, 156, 332
Boldog Orc captain, leader of a raid into Doriath. 229, 235, 274, 288, 293, 10-13
Bor Father of Blodrin the traitor (briefly replaced Ban). 31-3, 40, 49, 52
Bredhil the Blessed See Bridhil.
Bregolas Brother of Barahir and father of Baragund and Belegund. 335, 343, 349
Bregor (In the later legends) father of Barahir and Bregolas. 25
Bregu (Old English)='Vala'. 127
Brethil, Forest of 50, 309-10
Bridhil Gnomish name of Varda; called Bridhil the Blessed, Bridhil Queen of Stars. 135, 139, 169-70, 219, 233; changed to Bredhil 133-5, 139. See Timbridhil; Elbereth.
Brittany 160

Broceliande, Forest of 160. See Broseliand.
Bronweg Gnomish form of Voronwë, companion of Tuor. 148
Broseliand Earlier name of Beleriand. 152, 157-60, 169, 194-5, 232, 243, 304, 312, 315, 322; at first spelt Broceliand 158-60, 169
Bruithwir Father of Fëanor in the Lost Tales. 137, 139
Burning Briar Name of the constellation of the Great Bear. 167, 170, 251, 345, 349

Carcharoth The Wolf of Angband. 107, 119, 125, 151, 208, 289-94, 304, 307-9, 313, 362. Earlier forms Karkaras 125, 208, 294; Carcaras 125, 208; Carcharas 208, 210, 258, 271, 292-3, 310; Carcharos 292, 294, 305, 309, 312; Carcharolch 119, 125, 208; Gargaroth 292. Knife-fang 292-4; the Red Maw 289, 292, 294
Carpenter, Humphrey 3, 315, 319, 363
Celebrimbor Son of Curufin 274
Celeg Aithorn Mythological sword (lightning?) named in Beleg's 'whetting spell'. 45, 54
Celegorm (1) Transiently used=Thingol. 158-9, 171. (2) Son of Fëanor, called 'the fair'. 65, 80, 84-6, 91, 135-6, 151, 159, 169, 171, 182, 195, 198, 211, 213, 216, 218-22, 229, 236-40, 244-9, 256, 260, 263-5, 270-4, 283, 310-13, 358-9 (see especially 84-6, 171, 220-1, 247).
Chambers, R. W. 143
Chaucer, Geoffrey 143-4
Children of Húrin (poem in rhyming couplets) 130
City of Stone (Gondobar), Gondolin. 145. City of the Dwellers in Stone (Gondothlimbar), Gondolin. 145
City of the Gods, The (poem) 94
Cleft of Eagles See Cristhorn.
Cópas Alqalunten 'Haven of the Swanships'. 90. See Alqualondë, Swanhaven.
Côr 21-2, 29, 73, 93, 98, 103, 118, 123, 132-3, 149, 219; Kôr 21-2, 24, 84, 93, 139-40, 149
Corthûn 7, 21, 29, 103. See Tûn.

Cranthir Son of Fëanor, called 'the dark'. 65, 80, 86, 131, 135, 211; earlier form Cranthor 80, 86, 131
Cristhorn 'Eagles' Cleft' in the Encircling Mountains about Gondolin. 141-3; Cleft of Eagles, gap of the Eagles, 142-3 Cuinlimfin Transient form replaced by Cuiviénen. 23, 29 Cuiviénen 18, 23, 347; Waters of Awakening 29, Waking Water 349. Original form Koivië-Néni 23
Curufin Son of Fëanor, called 'the crafty'. 65, 80, 84-6, 91, 135, 151, 171, 211, 213, 216-18, 221, 223, 237, 239-42, 244-7, 260, 263-5, 270-4, 276, 303, 310-11, 313, 358-9; his horse 263-4, 269, 273, 275-6, 283-4; his knife (unnamed, later Angrist) 264, 272, 274, 303, 305-6, 309

Daeron See Dairon.
Dagmor Beren's sword. 344, 350
Dagnir One of the twelve companions of Barahir on Dorthonion. 335, 349 Dagor Bragollach 83. See Battle of Sudden Flame.
Daideloth Early name of Dor-na-Fauglith. 49
Dailir Beleg's arrow that never failed to be found and unharmed. 42, 45, 53, 55
Dairon Minstrel of Thingol. 104-5, 108-10, 119, 124, 156, 174, 176, 179, 181-2, 185-8, 190-1, 195, 197-8, 200-1, 203-6, 209, 270, 310-11, 313, 333, 356; later form Daeron 196-7, 313, 353, 355
Dairuin One of the twelve companions of Barahir on Dorthonion. 335, 349
Damrod Son of Fëanor. 65, 135, 211 Danigwethil Gnomish name of Taniquetil. 22. See Tain-Gwethil, Tengwethil.
Dark Elves 146; Dark Elf (Eöl) 147; Dark-elvish 239; kindreds of the dark 74
Deadly Nightshade Taur-na-Fuin. 34, 36, 48, 55, 63, 155, 227, 232, 254, 275, 279, 332; Deadly Night 227, 232; Tangled Night 232; Forest of Night 38, 55, 233-4

Delu-Morgoth Form of Morgoth's name, of unknown meaning. 6-7, 21, 49, 102; earlier Delimorgoth 21, 49

Dior the Fair Son of Beren and Lúthien. 125, 137, 182

Dinithel (?Durithel) Earlier name of Díriel. 86

Díriel Son of Fëanor. 65, 86, 135, 211

Door of Night 149. See Gates of Dread.

Dor-Cúarthol 'Land of Bow and Helm', the country defended by Beleg and Túrin in the later legend. 50-1

Doriath 10, 16, 20, 22, 24-8, 30, 33-4, 50-1, 53, 76, 87, 93, 104, 106-7, 109-10, 114, 116, 126-7, 146-7, 155, 158, 170, 173, 183, 185, 188, 195-6, 198, 200-2, 209, 215-17, 227, 229, 235, 238-40, 244, 247, 261-3, 267-8, 271-4, 280-1, 283, 287-8, 310-14, 316, 331-2, 346, 352-3, 359; Doriath beyond Sirion 89; the Dancer of Doriath 9, 61, 88; King of Doriath, see Thingol. See Artanor, Guarded Realm, Hidden Kingdom, Hidden People.

Dorlómin 8, 16, 24, 26, 29, 93, 104, 114, 116, 126, 148

Dor-na-Dhaideloth 49

Dor-na-Faughlith Name given to the great northern plain (Ard-galen) after its desolation in the Battle of Sudden Flame. 39, 41, 48-9, 55, 58, 87, 271, 275; see 284, and see Anfaughlith, Blasted Plain, Daideloth, Dor-na-Maiglos, Land of Thirst, Plains of Drouth, Thirsty Plain.

Dor-na-Maiglos Earlier name of Dor-na-Faughlith. 49

Dor-tathrin Another name of Nan-Tathrin, the Land of Willows. 89

Dorthonion The great forested highlands afterwards called Taur-na(nu)-Fuin. 171, 335, 345, 350-1

Dor-Winion, Dorwinion A southern land from which wine was imported into the North. 11, 17, 22, 26, 112, 118, 127

Dragon-helm 13-14, 16, 26-7, 51, 114, 116-17, 126; Helm of Hador 27, of Húrin 114-15

Draugluin The great werewolf of the Wizard's Isle, slain by Huan. 205, 210, 252, 256, 258, 278, 282-3, 289-93; Fearphantom Draugluin 292

Drûn Region north of Tarn Aeluin. 344, 350
Duilin Father of Flinding, in the Tale of Turambar; with patronymic prefix go- > bo-Dhuilin 'son of Duilin'. 53. (Replaced by Fuilin.)
Dungalef Riddling reversal of Felagund (replaced by Hate, 233). 229, 233-4 Dungorthin, Dungortheb See Nan Dungorthin .
Durin 316
Dwarves 32, 44, 52, 56, 111, 127, 161, 264, 306 (see especially 52, 306); dwarfland 115, 126; adjective dwarfen 44, elsewhere dwarvish. See Longbeard Dwarves.
Dweller in the Deep See Ulmo.

Éadgifu Mother of Ælfwine. 140
Eagles' Cleft See Cristhorn.
Eärendel 141-2, 144-5, 149; son of Fengel 141, 145. Later form Eärendil 83
Eglamar = Eldamar. 157, 181-2
Egnor (1) Beren's father (replaced by Barahir). 25, 119, 125, 159, 168-71, 198, 220, 247. (2) Son of Finrod (later Aegnor son of Finarfin), slain in the Battle of Sudden Flame. 80, 85, 138, 213, 222
Eiglir Engrin The Iron Mountains. 33, 41, 49. (Replaced Aiglir Angrin.) Eilinel Wife of Gorlim the Unhappy; called 'the white'. 162-4, 169-70, 336-9, 350 elanor Plant with golden flowers that grew in Beleriand. 333-4, 349 Elbereth Sindarin name of Varda. 336, 350, 361
Eldalië 309
Eldamar 'Elfhome'. 182, 331, 348, 356-8. See Eglamar.
Eldar 138, 334, 347
Eldarissa The language of the Eldar (in the period of the Lost Tales). 89
Elder Days 90, 210, 346, 349
Eledhwen Name of Morwen. 92

Elf-friends 198

Elfin As name of the language of the Eldar (opposed to Gnomish). 139. (Other uses of elfin, replaced by elven and elvish, are not given.)

Elfinesse 6, 108, 155, 174, 176, 180, 182, 190-3, 216, 228-9, 231, 241, 243, 255, 262, 264, 267, 286, 326, 360; later form Elvenesse 354, 360

Elfland 34, 134, 138, 183, 208, 234. See Elvenland.

Elu (Thingol) Sindarin form of Elwë (Singollo). 347

Elvenesse See Elfinesse.

Elvenland 231, 233, 333, 346, 360, 362. See Elfland.

Elves Selected references. Distinguished from Gnomes 11, 22; estimation of Men 7, 24; stature, and diminishment in relation to Men 44, 54; ruin of the Elves to be brought about by Men 98, 103-4; fate after death 20, 28, 47, 56, 58, 65, 94, 250, 258-60, 274, 308, 357-8; crossing of the Ocean to Valinor in ships 172, 182-3. See Dark Elves, Woodland Elves.

Encircling Mountains The mountains encircling the plain of Gondolin. 143, 148, 286

Engainor See Angainor.

England 154, 157, 181-2. See Leithien, Luthany.

English (language) 123, 127, 139, 160. See Old English.

Ennorath Middle-earth. 356

Eöl Father of Meglin (Maeglin). 52, 145-8

Erchamion 'One-handed', name of Beren. 121; Er(h)amion 119. (Replaced Ermabwed.)

Ered Gorgoroth The Mountains of Terror. 171, 183, 208, 234, 314; Gorgoroth 272-3, 350; Gorgorath 345 (described), 350, 361. See Shadowy Mountains.

Ered Luin The Blue Mountains. 160

Ered Wethrin The Shadowy Mountains. 29, 314

Eriol 182

Erithámrod Name of Húrin (translated 'the Unbending', 37 line 864), almost always in the collocation Thalion

Erithámrod. 6, 9, 11, 13, 21, 37, 96, 101, 111, 114

Ermabwed 'One-handed', name of Beren. 9, 12, 22, 25, 56, 104, 107, 112, 119-21; Ermabweth 119, 123.

(Replaced by Er(h)amion, Erchamion.)

Eruchîn Children of Eru. 354

Eruman 205

Esgalduin The enchanted river of Doriath. 76, 81-2, 93, 156, 158, 160, 177, 186, 199, 202-4, 213, 223, 262; the Elf-river 76; earlier form Esgaduin 81, 93, 158, 160

Ezellohar The Green Mound of the Two Trees in Valinor. 348, 350

Faëry, Faërie 16, 20, 28-32, 50, 58, 72, 93, 116, 134; Gulf of Faërie 17, 118, 148; Bay of Faëry 95; Faëry land 156, 168, Fairyland 233. The Shores of Faëry (poem) 182

Failivrin Name given to Finduilas daughter of Orodreth of Nargothrond. 76, 78, 80-1, 91-2; later form Faelivrin 91

Fairies 54, 156; fairy (adjective) 108, 122. See Faëry.

Fangros Unidentified place. 31, 49, 55; earlier form Fangair 49, 55.

Fëanor 87, 133, 135-9, 146-7, 192, 195, 198, 210-11, 217, 222, 242, 267, 302-3, 329; son of Finn 133, 138; Fëanor's fire, fire of Fëanor (the Silmaril) 267, 362. See Sons of Fëanor, Oath of the Fëanorians.

Fëanorians 235, 247, 272

Felagoth Earlier form for Felagund. 169, 171, 195, 221

Felagund 80, 85, 91, 138, 166, 169, 171, 191, 195, 198, 213-19, 221-3, 225-6, 229-31, 233-4, 240-2, 245-50, 255-8, 260, 270-1, 274, 279, 310-11, 313, 350-1, 357-8; Inglor Felagund 335, 350, 360; (later name) Finrod Felagund 93, 360. See Finrod (2), Inglor.

Fengel (1) Father of Tuor (replacing Peleg of the Lost Tales). 145, 148. (2) Tuor. 141, 145. (3) Fifteenth King of Rohan. 145

Filey, Yorkshire 150, 181

Finarfin 198, 357-60. (Replaced Finrod (1)).

Findóriel Earlier name for Finduilas. 81

Finduilas Daughter of Orodreth of Nargothrond. 65, 70, 75-8, 80-1, 83, 91-3. See Failivrin.

Fingolfin 21, 24, 86, 96, 98, 102, 136-8, 140, 145-7, 152, 222, 275, 284-7, 290, 293-4; Fingolfin's cairn 286-7. See Golfin.

Fingolma Name of Finwë Nólemë. 146-7

Fingon Son of Fingolfin, brother of Turgon; slain in the Battle of Unnumbered Tears. 5, 80, 86, 102-3, 137-8, 146-7, 152, 212, 219, 222, 287, 292. (Replaced Finweg (2)).

Finn Gnomish form of Finwë. 133, 137-8, 212, 222

Finrod (1) Earlier name of Finarfin. 80, 85, 138, 191, 198, 213, 216, 218, 221-2, 247, 260, 360. (2) Later name of Inglor (Felagund). 93, 357-60

Finwë The first lord of the Noldoli (Noldor), father of Fëanor, Fingolfin, and Finrod (1)/Finarfin. 24, 137-8, 146-7, 221-2; Finwë Nólemë 21, 86, 140, 146-7. See Fingolma, Finn, Finweg (1), Gelmir.

Finweg (1) = Finwë (Nólemë). 6, 21, 24, 86, 137-8, 146. (2) Earlier name of Fingon. 5, 71, 80, 86, 92, 96, 102-3, 111, 123, 136-8, 146, 152, 219, 222, 292

First Age 83

First Kindred 28, 139

Flinding Gnome of Nargothrond, companion of Túrin. 36-9, 41, 43-8, 52-60, 62-5, 67, 69-72, 74, 76-8, 80, 86-92, 94, 148, 306; frequently called Flinding go-Fuilin, i.e. Flinding son of Fuilin. (Replaced by Gwindor.)

Foalókë The Dragon in the Tale of Turambar. 29

Foamriders The Third Kindred of the Elves (Solosimpi of the Lost Tales, later the Teleri). 133, 140, 231, 235

Forest of Night Taur-na-Fuin. 38, 55, 233-4

Fuilin Father of Flinding. 72-4, 92-3; folk of, children of, Flinding 72, 74, 80. All other references are to Fuilin as Flinding's father: 36, 38, 44, 47, 53, 56, 65, 67, 69-72, 78, 80, 89. (Replaced Duilin.)

Fuithlug Gnomish form for Foalókë. 29

Galdor the Tall Húrin's father in the later legend (replacing Gumlin(2)). 126

Galweg Father of Failivrin in the Tale of Turambar. 91

Gandalf 127

Gargaroth See Carcharoth.

Gates of Dread (probably) the Door of Night. 149

Gaurhoth The Werewolves of Thû. 340, 350; Gaurhoth Isle 337, see Tol-in-Gaurhoth.

Gaurin Unknown; named in Beleg's 'whetting spell'. 45, 54

Gaurwaith The Wolf-men, the outlaw-band which Túrin joined in the later legend. 50

Geleriand Rejected name for Beleriand. 160

Gelmir Father of Fingolfin in the Lay of the Fall of Gondolin. 146-7

Gilammoth Rejected name for Nan Elmoth. 349

Gildor One of the twelve companions of Barahir on Dorthonion. 335, 349

Gilim 'The giant of Eruman', named in Lúthien's 'lengthening spell'. 205

Gim Githil Original Gnomish name of Inwë (replaced by Inwithiel). 28

Gimli Dwarf of the house of Durin, member of the Fellowship of the Ring. 158, 316

Ginglith River flowing into the Narog above Nargothrond. 66, 88, 215, 222

Glad-uial, Glath-uial Rejected name for Nan Elmoth (replaced by Gilammoth). 349

Glamhoth Gnomish name for Orcs. 16, 22, 30, 34, 41-2, 46, 48, 57, 71, 92, 96, 116, 146-7

Glend The sword of the giant Nan. 205

Glingal The Golden Tree of Valinor (Laurelin). 5, 80-2, 192, 195, 210; earlier form Glingol 5, 73, 80-2, 195, 219

Glómund Later name of Glórund (itself replaced by Glaurung). 205, 208-9 Gloomweaver The great Spider. 132. See Ungoliant.

Glorfindel Lord of the people of the Golden Flower in Gondolin. Glorfindel the golden 142

Glórund The Dragon. 5-6 (in title of first version of The Children of Húrin), 103, 208; the Worm of Greed 8, 100. (Replaced by Glómund.)

Gnomes, Gnomish 7, 11, 18, 21-2, 25, 28-9, 31, 35-8, 40, 45, 58-9, 61, 63-6, 69-70, 74 (the Gnome-river), 83-6, 90, 92, 94, 99, 104, 107, 111, 133, 136-9, 145-6, 148, 150, 152-3, 173, 187, 191-2, 195-6, 210, 212, 214, 217, 219-22, 226, 231-3, 235-7, 244, 247, 263, 270, 275, 283, 285; Doom of the Gnomes 16, 116; lamps of 35, 148. See Noldoli, Noldor.

Gnomish (language) 28-9, 61, 87, 93, 138-9, 160, 182; early Gnomish dictionary 22, 87, 89, 93, 124, 139, 160, 170, 198

Goblin(s) 34, 46, 48, 64, 148, 225-6, 282

God(s) Selected references. Passages concerning the relation of the Gods to Elves and Men 11-12, 26, 43, 54, 111 -12; 'a dream from the Gods' 203, 210; the Gods 'gaze on the world' 17; 'wrath of the Gods' 73; Wrack of the Realm of the Gods 31; God of Hell 6, of Darkness 102, of Sleep 180. See Valar.

Golda Original Gnomish equivalent of Noldo. 160. See Golodh.

Golfin Son of Gelmir (=Fingolfin). 147

Gollum 49

Golodh Sindarin equivalent of Quenya Noldo. 160.
Golodhinand, rejected name for Beleriand. 160

Gondobar 'City of Stone', one of the Seven Names of Gondolin. 145-6

Gondolin 23, 51, 81, 83, 90, 141-3, 145-9, 160, 286-7, 292, 309-10

Gondothlim The people of Gondolin. 103

Gondothlimbar 'City of the Dwellers in Stone', one of the Seven Names of Gondolin. 145

Gorgol An Orc, called the Butcher, slain by Beren. 344, 350

Gorgorath, Gorgoroth See Ered Gorgoroth.

Gorlim The companion of Barahir who betrayed his hiding-place on Dorthonion; called 'the Unhappy'. 162-5, 169-70, 318, 330, 333, 335-41, 348-51
Gorthol 'Dread Helm', the name that Túrin took in Dor-Cúarthol. 51
Gorthû Later name of Thû. 153, 232-3
Gothmog Lord of Balrogs. 103
Great Bear 170, 259. See Burning Briar, Seven Stars, Sickle of the Gods, Timbridhil.
Great Journey 182
Great Lands 26, 149, 212, 224. See Outer Lands.
Grond The great mace of Morgoth, 'Hammer of the Underworld'. 285, 293 Guarded Plain of Nargothrond 66, 88, 214, 222 Guarded Realm Doriath. 352
Guingelot Wade's boat. 144
Gulma Original Gnomish name of Ulmo. 93. See Ylmir.
Gumlin (1) The elder of Túrin's guardians on the journey to Doriath. 9, 12, 14, 22, 25, 126. (Replaced by Mailgond, Mailrond.) (2) Húrin's father. 115, 126. (Replaced by Galdor the Tall.)
Gurtholfin Túrin's sword. 28
Gurthrond 'The valley of the Dead Awaiting' (?) 20, 28; earlier form Guthrond 23, 28
Gwaeron (Sindarin) the month of March. 88
Gwareth, mount of The hill of Gondolin (Amon Gwareth). 142 Gwendeling Name of the Queen of Artanor in the Tale of Tinúviel. 125 Gwenethlin Name of the Queen of Artanor in the second version of the Tale of Tinúviel. 4 Gwindor Elf of Nargothrond, companion of Túrin (earlier Flinding). 83, 89-92

Hador 92, 126, 343, 350; Helm of Hador 27 (see Dragon-helm).
Haleth, People of 91

Halmir (1) Son of Orodreth, slain by Orcs; called 'the hunter'. 75, 82, 91. (2) A ruler of the People of Haleth. 91

Halog The younger of Túrin's guardians on the journey to Doriath. 9, 11-12, 22, 25, 105-8, 110-11, 113-14, 121-5

Hathaldir One of the twelve companions of Barahir on Dorthonion. 335, 349

Helcaraxë 136

Hells of Iron Angband. 6, 49

Helm of Húrin 114-15. See Dragon-helm.

Helsings Germanic tribe ruled by Wada (Wade). 142-4; Old English Hælsingas 143-4

Hidden Kingdom Doriath. 10, 106

Hidden People The Elves of Doriath. 11, 16, 111, 114, 116-17. See Woodland Elves.

High Faroth See Hills of the Hunters.

Hill of Death The mound raised by the Sons of Fëanor after the Battle of Unnumbered Tears. 87. See Mound of Slain.

Hills of Iron See Iron Hills.

Hills of the Hunters The highlands west of the river Narog. 61, 88-9, 214, 222-3; Hunters' Hills 66, 88; Wold of Hunters 72, 89, Hunters' Wold 67, 88, 92; later names High Faroth 88-9, Taur-en-Faroth 88. The Land of the Dead that Live in the Hills of the Hunters, 61, 89

Himling Great height east of the Gorge of Aglon. 263, 274; later form Himring 274, 313, 361

Hiradorn = Hirilorn. 208

Hirilorn 'Queen of Beeches' in Doriath. 186, 202-3, 206-9, 312

Hisilómë 28, 89. See Hithlum.

Hithlum 6, 8, 10-11, 14, 16, 19-20, 24-5, 27, 29, 34, 37, 44, 54, 59-60, 62, 73, 87, 96-7, 101, 105-7, 111-17, 119, 125-6, 148, 170, 274, 284, 287, 314. See Aryador, Dorlómin, Hisilómë, Land of Shadows, Lands of Mist.

Hlýða, Hlýdingaburg (Old English) Narog, Nargothrond. 87

Huan 87, 107, 236, 238-9, 241-8, 251-8, 260, 263-7, 269-73, 278-9, 283-4, 287-8, 290, 294, 306, 311-12, 314, 358; the hound of Hithlum, Huan wolf-bane 107

Hunters' Wold See Hills of the Hunters.

Húrin 4, 7, 11-14, 21-7, 37, 55-6, 71, 92, 96-8, 100, 102-5, 111-15, 117, 119, 125-6 (references to Túrin as son of Húrin etc. are included under Túrin). Called the Steadfast 11-12; Prince of Mithrim 96, 103; Lord of the Lands of Mist 96; and see Erithámrod, Thalion. Earlier form Urin 21-2, 25 (Urinthalion 21).

Idril Celebrindal Daughter of Turgon, wife of Tuor. 83

I·Guilwarthon The dead that live again. 314

Ilkorins Elves 'not of Kôr'. 84

Ilwë The middle air that flows among the stars. 139

Indor Father of Peleg father of Tuor (in the tale of The Fall of Gondolin). 145

Ing (1) Gnomish form of Ingwë. 28, 133, 138-9; sons of Ing 17, 28, 127; tower of Ing 73, 82, 93. (2) King of Luthany. 28

Inglor Eldest son of Finrod (1) (later Finarfin), called Felagund. 335, 350-1, 360. (Replaced by Finrod (2)).

Ingwë Lord of the First Kindred of the Elves (Gnomish Ing). 28, 93, 138-9

Ingwil Stream falling from the Hills of the Hunters into the Narog at Nargothrond. 68, 72, 80, 88, 214, 222. (Replaced by Ringwil.)

Inwë Earlier form for Ingwë. 28

Inwithiel Early Gnomish name of Inwë. 28. (Replaced Gim Githil.)

Iron Crown The crown of Morgoth. 52, 192-3, 221, 272, 296, 302, 352; iron-crowned 285, 293, 301

Iron Hills The Iron Mountains. 33, 49; Hills of Iron 30, 50

Iron Mountains 29, 49, 148; Mountains of Iron 39, 96. See Angorodin, Aiglr Angrin, Eiglr Engrin, Bitter Hills, Iron Hills, Mountains of the North.

Isfin Sister of Turgon, mother of Meglin. 145-7, 222. (Afterwards named Aredhel.)

Isle of Werewolves Tol-in-Gaurhoth. 87, 350. See Wizard's Isle.

Ithil (Sindarin) the Moon. 354

Ivárë Minstrel of the Elves 'who plays beside the sea'.
181-2

Ivrin The lake and falls beneath the Shadowy Mountains where the river Narog rose. 60, 62-3, 76, 87-91, 94, 170, 224, 234, 244

Karkaras See Carcharoth.

Kinslaying at Alqualondë 17, 70, 90, 104, 118, 136, 231

Knife-fang See Carcharoth.

Koivië-Néni See Cuiviénen.

Kôr See Côr.

Laer Cú Beleg The Song of the Great Bow. 89. See Beleg.

Ladros Lands to the northeast of Dorthonion. 344, 350

Lamps, The 148

Land of Dread The land of Morgoth. 155, 158, 168, 350

Land of Light The Blessed Realm. 236

Land of Shadow(s) Hithlum. 8, 104, 108

Land of the Dead that Live 89. See I-Guilwarthon.

Land of the Lost See Valley of the Dead Awaiting.

Land of Thirst Dor-na-Faughlith. 275

Land of Waiting See Valley of the Dead Awaiting.

Land of Willows Nan-Tathrin. 141-2

Lands of Ease The Blessed Realm. 172, 187, 308; a land of ease 148

Lands of Mist Hithlum. 96

Lassiriand Rejected name for Beleriand. 160

Laurelin 353

Leeds, University of 3, 81, 94, 120-2, 131, 142, 145

Leithian, Lay of Date of 3-4, 150-1, 159; named in The Children of Húrin 107, 121, and in the introductory verses to Light as Leaf on Lindentree 120; meaning of the name 154

Leithien, Leithian England. 154. See Lúthien (2).

Lewis, C. S. 150-1, 153, 157-8, 169, 181, 194-6, 208, 315-29

Light as Leaf on Lindentree (poem) 108–10, 120–6, 159, 181–2 Lionesse Legendary land now drowned between Cornwall and the Scilly Isles. 140 Lonely Island 48
Longbeard Dwarves 205
Lord of Gods See Manwë.
Lord of Hell Morgoth. 97–8. Also called Lord of Lies 348; Lord of the World 99; Lord of Woe 8, 101, 287; Prince of the People of Hell 16
Lord of Ocean See Ulmo.
Lord of Sleep See Lórien.
Lord of Wolves Thû (Sauron). 199, 210, 220, 233, 240, 256; Master of Wolves 228; Werewolf Lord 358
Lórien 137, 346–7; God of Sleep 180, Lord of Sleep 172
Loruin Alternative name to Nargil. 49
Loth ‘The Flower’, one of the Seven Names of Gondolin. 149
Loth-a-ladwen ‘Lily of the Plain’, one of the Seven Names of Gondolin. 149 (cf. 309–10). (Replaced Lothengriol.)
Lothengriol Name of Gondolin as ‘Lily of the Valley’, replaced by Loth-a-ladwen. 149
Loth Barodrin Rejected name for Loth-a-ladwen. 149 Lungorthin ‘Lord of Balrogs’. 98, 102
Luthany England. 154
Lúthien (1) Ælfwine. 154. (2) England. 154. See Leithien.
Lúthien (3) Daughter of Thingol and Melian. 54, 104, 107, 119–20, 124–5; passim in Lay of Leithian and commentaries. See Melilot, Tinúviel.
Lydbrook Stream-name in England. 88
Lyme Regis, Dorset 223, 234

Mablui Name of Melian. 34, 55–6, 108
Mablung ‘Heavyhand’, Thingol’s chief warrior (311). 25–6, 56, 310–14 Maeglin See Meglin.
Maelor Variant of Maglor. 353

Maglor (1) Transiently used = Beren. 159, 168-71, 182. (2) Son of Fëanor. 65, 84, 86, 135-6, 159, 174, 181-2, 211, 353; called 'the swift' 65, 'the mighty' 135, 211.

Maid of Tears See Nienor.

Maidros Eldest son of Fëanor. 65, 84, 86, 135-7, 211-12, 222; Union of Maidros 274 (see Marching Forth).

Mailrond The elder of Túrin's guardians on the journey to Doriath. 105-6, 113, 119, 123, 126; earlier form Mailgond 119, 126. (Replaced Gumlin (1)).

Mailwin See Morwen.

Malory, Sir Thomas 143

Mandos 28, 103, 125, 137-8, 196, 274, 309, 312, 314

Mánir Spirits of the air, attendant on Manwë and Varda. 137, 306

Manwë 133, 137, 139, 211, 230, 286, 306; Lord of Gods 211

Map, Walter 144

Marching Forth The Union of Maidros. 265, 274

Mavwin See Morwen.

Meássë Warrior goddess. 127

Meglin Son of Eöl and Isfin, betrayer of Gondolin. 146-7; later form Maeglin 52, 83

Melegor Name of Morgoth, replacing Belegor, replaced by Bauglir. 21-2

Melian Queen of Doriath. 4, 12-13, 16, 22, 28, 33-4, 53, 55, 107, 112-14, 116-17, 125, 127, 148, 172-3, 188-94, 197, 199-200, 203-4, 207, 210, 215, 240, 242, 246, 261, 272, 287, 298, 311-13, 332, 346-7, 350, 360; the immortal Queen 352. See Ar-, Tar-Melian; Gwendeling, Gwenethlin; Mablui.

Melilot Transiently used = Lúthien. 157, 159, 182

Melilot Brandybuck 159

Melko 21, 27, 137, 139, 142, 145, 148, 219, 221, 305

Menegroth The Thousand Caves in Doriath. 28, 50-1, 332, 349

Middle-earth 90, 224, 269, 313, 331, 334, 349, 356; midworld 18. See Ennorath, Great Lands.

Mîm the Dwarf 52
Mindeb Tributary of Sirion. 261, 274, 360
Mindon Eldaliéva The tower of Ingwë in Tiron. 93. See Ing.
Mithrim (Lake and perhaps also region, see 103). 103, 105, 115, 118–19, 126; Prince of Mithrim (Húrin) 96, 103; Men of Mithrim 97, 103
Moon, The Selected references. Halls of the Moon 47, 56, 65, 259; the Moon as a ship (see Silver Wherry) 74, 93, 128–9; Fëanor's foreknowledge of the Sun and Moon 138
Morgoth Passim. Other names: see Bauglir, Belcha, Belegor, Melegor, Melko, Delu-Morgoth, Lord of Hell, and under Gods.
Moria 158, 316
Morwen Wife of Húrin. 5, 22–7, 92–4, 104–6, 111–16, 126–7; Morwen Eledhwen 92. Earlier forms Mavwin 5, 22–5, Mailwin 22, Morwin 5, 8–14, 16–18, 22–3, 27
Mound of Slain (58–9), 87. See Hill of Death.
Mountains of Iron See Iron Mountains.
Mountains of Shadow See Shadowy Mountains.
Mountains of Terror Ered Gorgoroth. 170–1, 183, 208, 234, 314, 350–1
Mountains of the North The Iron Mountains. 59, (101)
Mountains of the West The Mountains of Valinor. 74

Nahar Oromë's horse. (186, 198), 356
Nan A Giant. 205, 208; Nann 208
Nan Dungorthin 59, 87, 89, 148, 312, 314; Dungorthin 148, 332, 348, 350; earlier form Nan Dumgorthin 87, 314; later form Dungortheb 348. See Nan Orwen.
Nan Elmoth 346–7, 349–50. See Glad-uial, Gilammoth.
Nan Orwen Transient substitution for Dungorthin. 148.
Nan-Tathrin The Land of Willows. 61, 89; Nantathrin 89. See Dortathrin, Tasarinan.
Nargil Unknown; named in Beleg's 'whetting spell'. 45, 49, 54. See Loruin.
Nargothrond 36, 38, 51, 53, 55, 58, 61–2, 64–6, 69, 74, 80, 83–8, 90–3, 151, 171, 191, 195, 213–15, 217–18, 220–1, 223-4, 229, 231, 233-4, 237, 240-7, 257, 260-1, 268, 270-4, 287, 310-13, 321-2, 335, 351, 358-9. Winter comes to Nargothrond (poem) 128-9. See Hlýdingaburg.

Narn i Hîn Húrin 5, 21, 24-8, 50-2, 88, 91-2, 126

Narog 61-2, 65-9, 74-5, 79, 84-5, 87-9, 151, 213-15, 224, 234, 237; the Gnome-river 74; = 'torrent' 61. Used of the realm of the Gnomes of Nargothrond (Lord of Narog, folk of Narog, etc.) 67, 69, 75, 213, 215, 217, 224, 228, 237, 260, 311; Wards of Narog 66, 88. Storm over Narog (poem) 128. See Hlýda.

Narrow Crossing From the Western Lands to the Great Lands. 31

Neldoreth The forest forming the northern part of Doriath. 355, 360

Nellas Elf of Doriath who bore witness against Saeros in the trial of Túrin before Thingol. 50

Nemorie Unknown. 122

Nereb Riddling reversal of Beren (replaced by Wrath, 233). 229, 233

Nessa 127

Nienor Túrin's sister. 9, 13-14, 22, 25, 93, 104, 113, 115; Maid of Tears 20; Nienóri 22

Níniel Turambar's name for Nienor. 6, 96

Nínin Udathriol 'Unnumbered Tears'. 21-2, 79. (Replaced by Nínin Unothradin.)

Nínin Unothradin 'Unnumbered Tears'. 5-6, 11, 21, 79; Nirnaithos Unothradin 21, 79. (Replaced by Nirnaith Únoth.)

niphredil A white flower that bloomed in Doriath. 333, 349

Nirnaith Arnediad 'Unnumbered Tears'. 5, 102-3; later form the Nirnaeth. 91. (Replaced Nirnaith Ornoth.)

Nirnaith Ornoth 'Unnumbered Tears'. 5, 59, 61, 79, 84, 96, 102, 111. (Replaced by Nirnaith Arnediad.)

Nirnaith Únoth 'Unnumbered Tears'. 5, 79-80, 84-5, 102, 123. (Replaced by Nirnaith Ornoth.)

Nogrod City of the Dwarves. 32, 45, 52, 56, 111, 127, 264, 274, 303, 306, 343

Noldoli 21, 24, 55, 82, 84, 90, 138, 140, 146–7, 149, 282; singular Noldo 53, 160. See Noldor, Gnomes.

Noldor 104, 139, 284; Doom of the Noldor 248; adjective Noldorin 83, 137, 147, 350. See Noldoli, Gnomes.

Noldórinan Rejected name for Beleriand. 160

Númenóreans 269

Oarni Spirits of the sea. 148

Oath of the Fëanorians 31, 50, 135–6 (in alliterative verse), 193, 210, 211–12 (in rhyming couplets), 216, 217
(as spoken by Celegorm), 219, 221–2, 245

Ogbar Unknown; named in Beleg's 'whetting spell'. 45, 54

Oikeroi A cat,thane of Tevildo, slain by Huan. 258, 270–1, 282

Old English 23, 87, 95, 127, 140–1 (metre), 143–5, 151, 271

Orcs Passim. See Glamhoth, Goblins, Wolfriders. Orc-
road, see Taur-na-Fuin.

Orcs Passim. See Glamhoth, Goblins, Wolfriders. Orc-
road, see Taur-na-Fuin.

Orfalch Echor The ravine through the Encircling Mountains about Gondolin. 83

Orgof Elf of Doriath, slain by Túrin. 18–20, 23–5, 28, 30, 51, 127

Ormaid Rejected name for Tavros (Oromë), changed from Ormain. 195

Orodreth King of Nargothrond. 65, 69–71, 75, 80, 82–6, 90–1, 138, 213, 218–19, 221–2, 229, 237, 242, 246–7, 260, 272–3, 358–9; see especially 91, 246

Oromë 127, 137, 198, 235–6, 248. See Ormaid, Tauros, Tavros.

Ossë 137, 148

Ossiriand(e) Rejected name for Beleriand. 158–60

Outer Lands The Great Lands (Middle-earth). 211, 224

Outer Seas 356; outmost sea 172

Outer World The lands east of the Blue Mountains. 156, 160, 332

Oxford 3, 81, 94, 120, 127, 330

Palúrien Yavanna. 160; Aulë's wife 139

Peleg Father of Tuor in the Lost Tales. 145. See Fengel (1).

Plains of Drouth Dor-na-Fauglith. 36, 55, 232; fields of drouth 227, 232

Pools of Twilight 56, 142. See Twilight Meres, Umboth-Muilin.

Prophecy of the North 103–4, 136

Qenta Quenta Noldorinwa, the 'Silmarillion' version of 1930. 219

Quenya 87, 160

Radhruin One of the twelve companions of Barahir on Dorthonion. 335, 349

Ragnor One of the twelve companions of Barahir on Dorthonion. 335, 349

Red Maw See Carcharoth.

Reynolds, R. W. 3

Rhûn, Sea of 26

Ringil Fingolfin's sword. 285–6, 293

Ringwil Later name of the stream Ingwil. 89

Ringwraiths 124

Rivil, Rivil's Well Stream rising in Dorthonion and flowing into Sirion in the Fen of Serech. 171, 342, 350

Rodothlim Precursors of the Gnomes of Nargothrond. 53, 83, 85, 90, 247

Rodrim Unknown; named in Beleg's 'whetting spell'. 45, 54

Saeros Elf of Doriath, enemy of Túrin. 51.

Saithnar Unknown; named in Beleg's 'whetting spell'. 45, 54

Sauron 153, 170, 232–3, 284, 304, 306, 313, 337–40, 342, 344, 348, 350

Scarlet Heart, The Emblem of Turgon. 146

Serech, Fen of North of the Pass of Sirion, where Rivil flowed in from Dorthonion. 171, 335, 342, 350-1

Seven Stars The constellation of the Great Bear. 170, 251, 259

Shadowy Mountains (1) = Ered Wethrin. 16, 29, 59, 62, 87, 116, 148, 170, 224, 233-4, 312, 314. (2) = Ered Gorgoroth. 168, 170, 183, 201, 208, 234, 314; Mountains of Shadow 170; described 175-6, 345

Shadowy Seas 73, 93, 95, 148, 187, 192; Shadowy Sea 346

Sickle of the Gods The constellation of the Great Bear. 170, 266; Sickle of the Valar 259; sickle of the heavenly field 169-70

Silmarillion, The 21, 23, 25-6, 50-3, 55, 81, 87-93, 103-4, 125, 127, 136, 138-9, 149, 169-71, 183, 196, 198, 209-10, 222-4, 235, 244, 246-8, 257-9, 271, 274, 283-4, 293, 305-6, 309-10, 312-14, 349-51, 353. The 1930 version (Quenta Noldorinwa) 25, 28-9, 53, 80-1, 93, 104, 137, 139, 152-4, 170, 219, 293; references to the work in general sense 83, 85, 103, 183, 209; earliest 'Silmarillion' map 87-9, 103, 160, 244; later map 350

Silmaril(s) 52, 125, 134-6, 138-9, 151, 192-3, 196-7, 211-12, 216-17, 220-1, 237, 262, 265, 270, 272, 296, 301, 303-5, 307-9, 311-12, 329, 353, 361-2; the Gnome-crystal 107, Fëanor's fire 267, fire of Fëanor, Light of Morn 362; the Three 133-4

Silver Wherry The Moon. 74, 93, 128

Sindarin 87, 160

Sirion 23, 59-61, 87-9, 129, 142-3, 148, 160, 213-14, 222-3, 227, 233-4, 237, 254-5, 257, 259-60, 278, 309, 312, 314; Sirion's vale 276, 284, 357; Pass of Sirion 284; Sirion's Isle, the isle in Sirion 260, 278, 357; Sirion's Well 59, 87

Sir Orfeo Middle English lay. 248

Sketch of the Mythology The original 'Silmarillion' (1926). 3, 5, 28, 52, 84-6, 93, 137-9, 147, 153-4, 170, 220-2, 244, 293

Solosimpi The Third Kindred of the Elves, later called the Teleri. 140

Son(s) of Fëanor 6, 32, 50, 65, 84, 86-7, 96, 98, 102, 131, 134-6, 138, 159, 171, 182, 192, 210-11, 216-17, 221-2, 227, 236, 241, 244, 260-1, 265, 287, 313, 353, 359

Speght, Thomas Editor of Chaucer. 144

Súlimë Quenya name of the third month. 88

Sundering Seas 126

Súruli Spirits of the winds. 137, 306

Swanhaven 104; Swans' Haven 70, 118; Swanships' Haven 17. See Alqualondë, Cópas Alqalunten.

Tain-Gwethil, Taingwethil Gnomish name of Taniquetil. 17, 31, 49-50, 79, 118, 123, 127, 135-6. See Tengwethil, Danigwethil.

Taniquetil 22, 50, 127, 139, 222

Tar-Melian Melian. 349-50. See Ar-Melian.

Tarn Aeluin, Aeluin Lake on Dorthonion where Barahir and his companions made their lair. 171, 335-6, 339-41, 345, 350

Tasarinan The Land of Willows. 89. See Nan-Tathrin.

Taur-en-Faroth See Hills of the Hunters.

Taur-na-Fuin 34, 36, 40-1, 53, 55, 63, 89, 146-8, 155, 160, 170, 227, 234-5, 255, 257, 263, 271-3, 276, 282-3, 297, 311, 348; earlier form Taur Fuin 55, 146, 160; later form Taur-nu-Fuin 171, 282, 284, 332, 348. Ancient Orc-road through the forest 39, 53. See Deadly Nightshade, Dorthonion.

Tauros Name of Oromë. 195, 282, 356. (Replaced Tavros.)

Tavros Name of Oromë. 186-7, 195, 198, 235-6, 243, 245, 276, 282, 356. (Replaced by Tauros.) See Ormaid.

Telchar Dwarf smith of Belegost, or of Nogrod. 115, 126

Teleri (1) The First Kindred of the Elves (afterwards called Vanyar). 28, 139. (2) In later sense, = Solosimpi of the Lost Tales. 140

Tengwethil Gnomish name of Taniquetil. 22, 58, 79, 123, 135-6, 139, 259; Tengwethiel 49. See Tain-Gwethil.

Tevildo Prince of Cats 220-1, 257-8, 270, 272
Thaliodrin Name of Túrin, 'son of Thalion'. 9, 22, 49, 79
Thalion 'Steadfast'. (1) Name of Húrin; also the Thalion. 4, 6-9, 11-14, 21-2, 37, 71, 92, 96-7, 100-2, 111, 114. (2) Name of Túrin. 32-3, 48-9, 51, 60, 66, 72
Thangorodrim 8, 24, 33, 37, 39-40, 49, 55, 59, 87, 101, 212, 222, 227, 275, 281-3, 309-10; the triple peaks 40, 55
Théoden King of Rohan. 145
Thingol 9-14, 16-17, 19-20, 24-8, 30, 32-4, 43, 50-2, 61, 98, 104-5, 107, 111-15, 117-18, 124, 127, 138; passim in Lay of Leithian and commentaries. Elu Thingol 347; Robber Thingol 229, cf. 16, 117; the Grey King 352; King of Doriath 12, 17-18, 112-13, 117; his wealth 26, 160-1. See Tinwelint.
Third Age 145
Third Kindred 140, 235
Thirsty Plain Dor-na-Faughlith. 39, 55, 213, 222
Thorndor Gnomish name of Sorontur, King of Eagles. 286, 292; later form Thorondor 292, 309-10, 314
Thornsir Falling stream below Cristhorn in the Encircling Mountains about Gondolin. 142; stream of Eagles 143 Thousand Caves 9, 12, 20, 28, 34, 50, 53, 76, 98, 105, 113, 127, 156, 160, 194-6, 312, 314; Thousand Caverns 186, 332. See Menegroth.
Three Kindreds 8, 100, 132, 138
Thû 16, 27-8, 117, 146-8, 153, 170, 220, 227-8, 230-8, 240-1, 244-6, 249, 251-4, 256-60, 276, 279, 284, 288, 290, 293-4, 297, 306, 311, 313; called necromancer 228, 234. (Replaced by Gorthû.)
Thuringwethil (1) Name given to herself by Lúthien before Morgoth. 297, 304, 306. (2) The bat-messenger of Sauron 283-4.
Timbrenting Old English name of Taniquetil. 133-6, 139, 211, 222, 250, 259; alternative form Tindbrenting 123, 127, 139. On the name see 127, 139.

Timbridhil (1) Name of Varda. 139, 170. (2) Name of the Great Bear. 169-70

Tindbrenting See Timbrenting.

Tinfang Gnomish name of Timpinen the piper. Tinfang Warble 181-2; later Tinfang Gelion 174, 181-2

Tinúviel 9, 22, 87, 89, 104, 107-9, 120, 122, 124-5, 153, 159, 180-4, 193, 197-9, 203, 209, 215, 244, 257-9, 261, 270, 272, 277, 282-3, 291, 297, 305, 307, 309, 312, 314, 354, 357, 360; Tinwiel 22. On the meaning of the name see 124, 182.

Tinwelint King of Artanor (later Thingol of Doriath). 26, 124, 148, 160-1, 305; Tinwë Linto 124

Tinwetári 'Queen of Stars', Varda. 170

Tinwiel Transient form for Tinúviel. 22

Tiron 93, 149

Tol Eressëa 148, 183

Tol-in-Gaurhoth The Isle of Werewolves in Sirion. 306, 313, 350; Gaurhoth Isle 337. See Wizard's Isle.

Tolkien, J. R. R. Works: The Hobbit 26, 152; The Lord of the Rings 81, 152, 330, 356-7, 360; The Fellowship of the Ring 124, 127, 158, 269; Unfinished Tales 5, 26, 53, 83, 89, 91, 94, 145, 357 (see also Narn i Hîn Húrin); Pictures by J. R. R. Tolkien 53, 88, 90, 223, 234; Sir Gawain and the Green Knight, Pearl, and Sir Orfeo, translations, 248; The Monsters and the Critics and Other Essays 23, 140. The Silmarillion is referenced separately.

Tramorie Unknown. 122

Tulkas 127, 137

Tumladin The plain of Gondolin. 142; later form Tumladen 83

Tûn 17, 21, 29, 36, 49, 53, 73, 81-2, 93, 123, 132, 192, 210, 217, 219. See Côr, Corthûn.

Túna 149

Tuor 83, 89-90, 143-4, 145, 148-9; variant form Tûr 142-3

Turambar 29

Turgon 6-7, 21, 23-4, 96-100, 103, 137-8, 146-7, 149, 222

Túrin (including references to him as son of Húrin, etc.) 6, 9-14, 16-20, 22-8, 30-3, 37, 40, 43-60, 62-7, 70-9, 82-3, 86-94, 96-7, 104-7, 110, 112-18, 121, 124, 126-7, 148, 215, 217, 259. His age 14, 25, 115, 127; his character 14, 27, 115-16; his stature 44. See Thaliodrin, Thalion.

Turumart Gnomish form for Turambar. 29

Twilight Meres 214, 222. See Pools of Twilight, Umboth-Muilin.

Two Captains Beleg and Túrin in the Land of Dor-Cúarthol. 51

Two Trees 93, 350; Trees of Light 132; the Trees 139, 210

Ufedhin A Gnome allied with the Dwarves, ensnarer of Tinwelint. 52

Uinen Lady of the Sea. 205

Ulmo 5, 79, 87, 89, 93-4, 137, 183, 347; Dweller in the Deep 61, 93; Lord of Ocean 130

Úmarth 'Ill-fate', fictitious name for Húrin given by Túrin in Nargothrond. 92

Umboth-Muilin 56, 214, 222. See Pools of Twilight, Twilight Meres.

Umuiyan Tevildo's doorkeeper. 257

Ungoliant 132, 141. See Gloomweaver.

Union of Maidros 274. See Marching Forth.

Unnumbered Tears See Battle of Unnumbered Tears.

Úrin See Húrin.

Urthel One of the twelve companions of Barahir on Dorthonion. 335, 349 Valacirca The Sickles of the Valar. 170. See Great Bear, Sickle of the Gods.

Valar 26, 54, 127, 136-7, 173, 192, 243; the Nine Valar 133, 137; Vali 137, 306

Valinor 28, 37, 92, 94, 104, 127, 136, 139, 142, 147, 149, 182, 210-11, 231, 235, 247, 253, 259-60, 274, 276, 284, 288, 291, 331, 346, 348, 350; Mountains of Valinor 172, 346, Mountains of the West 74; wine of Valinor 111, 127.

 See Aman, Blessed Realm, Land of Light, Lands of Ease.
Valley of the Dead Awaiting 20, 28. Land of Waiting 309;
Land of the Lost 308. See Gurthrond.
Valmar 198, 236, 279
Vanished Isles 142–3
Vanyar 139. See Teleri (1).
Varda 139, 170, 211, 219, 230, 233, 251, 259, 301, 306, 349; called the Holy 211, 219. See Bridhil, Timbridhil, Tinwetári.
Vê The hall of Véfantur Mandos. 28
Voronwë 90. See Bronweg.

Wade of the Helsings 142–4; Wada 143–4; Gado 144
Waking Water See Cuiviénen.
Waters of Awakening See Cuiviénen.
Weathertop 124, 126
Western Sea 224; Western Shore 268
Widsith Old English poem. 143
Wingelot Eärendel's ship. 144 Winter Comes to Nargothrond (poem, also called Storm over Narog) 128–9
Wizard's Isle The Isle of Werewolves (Tol-in-Gaurhoth).
 228, 248, 251, 258, 271, 273, 279, 283, 293, 306. Other references to the isle 227, 234, 241, 260, 270–1, 276, 278, 284, 288; the isle described 227, 234 Wizard's Tower The tower of Thû on the Isle of Werewolves. (258), 270–1, 293
Wolfriders 10, 40, 110, (278)
Woodland Elves The Elves of Doriath. 24, 159–60; Wood- Elves 239, 312; folk of the wood 9, 16, 29, 105, 116, of the caves 20. See Hidden People.
Woodmen of Brethil 50, 93
Worm of Greed See Glórund.

Yavanna 248. See Palúrien.

Ylmir Gnomish form for Ulmo. 5, 59, 61-2, 79, 87, 93. See Gulma.

OTHER BOOKS BY J.R.R. TOLKIEN

ጠ ከ ከፍታ ምን ይህ ይሆናል ስለዚህ በእርስዎ ላይ የሚኖሩት ይህም ይህም ይህም ይህም ይህም ይህም ይህም ይህም ይህም

THE HISTORY OF MIDDLE-EARTH

1

THE BOOK OF LOST TALES, PART ONE

11

THE BOOK OF LOST TALES, PART TWO

III

THE LAYS OF BELERIAND

IV

THE SHAPING OF MIDDLE-EARTH

V

THE LOST ROAD AND OTHER WRITINGS

VI

THE RETURN OF THE SHADOW

VII

THE TREASON OF ISENGARD

VIII

THE WAR OF THE RING

IX

SAURON DEFEATED

X

MORGOTH'S RING

XI

THE WAR OF THE JEWELS

XIII

THE PEOPLES OF MIDDLE-EARTH

ከሰከ ሰፍረው የሚገኝ ሕዝብ ሲሆን፡ ለሕዝቡ ስም ሲሆን ሕዝቡ የሕዝቡ ስም ሲሆን ሕዝቡ ስም ሲሆን ሕዝቡ ስም ሲሆን ሕዝቡ ስም ሲሆን ሕዝቡ ስም ሲሆን ሕዝቡ ስም ሲሆን ሕዝቡ ስም ሲሆን ሕዝቡ ስም ሲሆን

ABOUT THE PUBLISHER

Australia

HarperCollins Publishers (Australia) Pty. Ltd.
Level 13, 201 Elizabeth Street Sydney, NSW 2000, Australia
www.harpercollins.com.au

Canada

HarperCollins Canada
Bay Adelaide Centre, East Tower
22 Adelaide Street West, 41st Floor Toronto, ON, M5H 4E3, Canada
www.harpercollins.ca

India

HarperCollins India
A 75, Sector 57
Noida, Uttar Pradesh 201 301, India www.harpercollins.co.in

New Zealand

HarperCollins Publishers New Zealand
Unit D, 63 Apollo Drive
Rosedale 0632
Auckland, New Zealand
www.harpercollins.co.nz

United Kingdom

HarperCollins Publishers Ltd.
1 London Bridge Street
London SE1 9GF

www.harpercollins.co.uk

United States

HarperCollins Publishers Inc.

195 Broadway

New York, NY 10007

www.harpercollins.com

* Dorwinion is marked on the decorated map by Pauline Baynes, as a region on the North-western shores of the Sea of Rhûn. It must be presumed that this, like other names on that map, was communicated to her by my father (see Unfinished Tales p. 261, footnote), but its placing seems surprising.

*That Ing is the Gnomish form of Ingwë appears from the 1926 'Sketch of the Mythology' and the 1930 'Silmarillion'. Ing was replaced by Inwë in The Cottage of Lost Play, but there the Gnomish name of Inwë is Inwithiel, changed from Gim Githil (l. 16, 22).

*The element of the blue lamp is lacking from the account in The Silmarillion; see Unfinished Tales p. 51 note 2.

* Here the B-typescript ends, and the remainder of the text is manuscript. See the Note on the Texts, p. 81.

* Cf. lines 1873-4:

Has the watch then waned in the woods of Narog
since Orodreth ruled this realm and folk?

*The only external evidence for date (other than the physical nature of the texts, which were clearly made at Leeds, not at Oxford) is the fact that a page of IIA is written on the back of a formal letter from The Microcosm (a Leeds literary quarterly, in which my father published the poem The City of the Gods in the Spring 1923 issue, see l. 136) acknowledging receipt of a subscription for 1922; the letter was evidently written in 1923.

* Here the latest text IID ends, and IIB is followed from this point; see p. 95.

* For the textual history of this poem's insertion into the Lay see the Note on pp. 120-2.

* A possible if rather finespun explanation is that lines 266–8 were not in fact written in to the text at the same time as the two pasted-in slips (giving lines 358–66 and 398–402), as I have supposed (p. 120), but were earlier. On this view, when 266–8 were written Tinúviel was not yet Beren's name for Lúthien, but was her common soubriquet, known both near and far (266), and meant 'Star-mantled'. Later, when 358–66 were added, it had become the name given to her by Beren (361), and meant 'Nightingale'. If this were so, it could also be supposed that line 268, who light as leaf on linden tree, gave rise to the title of the poem.

* In the 1930 'Silmarillion' it is expressly stated that Ing and Finn are the Gnomish forms of Ingwë and Finwë.

* In which he undertook 'fabulous exploits'. It is conceivable that there was some connection between Eärendel's great world-girdling voyage and the travels of Wade as described by the twelfth-century English writer Walter Map, who tells how Gado (sc. Wade) journeyed in his boat to the furthest Indies.

*This is the page referred to in Unfinished Tales p. 4: 'some lines of verse in which appear the Seven Names of Gondolin are scribbled on the back of a piece of paper setting out "the chain of responsibility in a battalion".' Not knowing at that time where this isolated scrap came from I took this as an indication of very early date, but this is certainly mistaken: the paper must have survived and been used years later for rough writing.

* Taur Fuin is the form in the Lost Tales; it was here emended later to Taur-na-Fuin, which is the form from the first in The Children of Húrin.

*This is the only point in which the Seven Names differ from their forms in the Tale (ll. 158). In the Tale the name of the city as 'Lily of the Valley' is Lothengriol. For ladwen 'plain' see ll. 344. In a draft of the passage in the lay the name was Loth Barodrin.

*This was written on the backs of examination-scripts, tied together and prepared as a blank manuscript: it was large enough to last through the six years, and a few scripts at the end of the bundle remained unused.

*This leads to inconsistent treatment of certain names as between the two long Lays, e.g. Finweg son of Fingolfin in The Children of Húrin but Fingon in the Lay of Leithian. Finweg survived into the 1930 version of 'The Silmarillion' but was early emended to Fingon.

* Once near the very end (line 3957), in the manuscript conclusion of the B-text, the form as written is Beleriand, not Broseliand.

* My father expressly stated in his diary that he began Tinúviel in the summer of 1925; and it is to be noted that a reference to the Lay of Leithian appears in the alliterative head-piece to one of the typescripts of Light as Leaf on Lindentree – which was actually published in June 1925 (see pp. 120-1). Thus the reference in the second version of The Children of Húrin to the Lay of Leithian (p. 107 line 356) is not evidence that he had in fact begun it.

* On the earliest 'Silmarillion' map it is said that 'all the lands watered by Sirion south of Gondolin are called in English "Broseliand"'.

* On pp. 166, 172; but the passage concerning Dacron on p. 183 is original. My father apparently intended to insert references to Daeron's betrayals of Lúthien, but did not do so.

*This phrase was changed to: 'Beren gets lost and separated from his Gnomish guides'; and was then struck out with the rest of the passage.

* An intermediate stage is seen in a rewritten passage of the 1926 'Sketch of the Mythology', to be given in Vol. IV, where Celegorm has already been displaced by Felagoth (not yet Felagund) but where Celegorm only learns the errand of Felagoth and Beren after their departure from Nargothrond, and they leave with a large force.

* If the previous passage of Synopsis I (p. 219) is strictly interpreted Celegorm went with Beren from Nargothrond, but this is obviously not meant: my father must have struck out more than he intended to. It is now clear that in this form of the story Celegorm disguised Beren and gave him guides.

*.i.e., if he should return to Nargothrond; see lines 2330 ff.

* Auchinleck manuscript lines 285-6 (ed. A. J. Bliss, Oxford 1954, p. 26); cf. my father's translation (Sir Gawain and the Green Knight, Pearl, and Sir Orfeo, 1975):

with blowing far and crying dim and barking hounds that were with him

* It is also possible that '10 continued' means only that my father began Synopsis V at this point, i.e. he had already reached about line 3117 in the actual composition of the Lav when he began the outline.

*The reference in The Silmarillion to Celebrimbor son of Curufin remaining in Nargothrond at this time and renouncing his father was a much later development.

* Beren must in fact have been on the northern edge of Taur-na-Fuin when Lúthien and Huan came up with him, since 'he looks upon Thangorodrim'.

* For example: 'the rumour of his feet' (cf. line 3561); Morgoth 'like a tower, iron-crowned' (cf. 3563); he swung Grond down 'like a bolt of thunder' (cf. 3571); 'smoke and fire darted' (cf. 3572-3); 'the blood gushed forth black and smoking' (cf. 3606-7); &c.

* An account of it, with some citation, has been given by Humphrey Carpenter in The Inklings, pp. 29-31, where the view expressed in his Biography, p. 145, that 'Tolkien did not accept any of Lewis's suggestions', is corrected.

* Both Maglor and Maelor appear in the draft manuscripts of this passage. The final typescript has Maelor, changed to Maglor, but not I think by my father.

†In The Silmarillion (p. 254) it is not said that Maglor ended his life in the sea: he cast the Silmaril into the sea, 'and thereafter he wandered ever upon the shores, singing in pain and regret beside the waves'.

‡There is no other reference to a 'pool' or 'mere' at the place in the woods where Beren came upon Lúthien.

* Ennorath: 'Middle-earth'; cf. The Lord of the Rings, Appendix E (III. 393, footnote 1).

Eldamar*: earlier reading the Blessed Realm. – With these lines cf. the revised version of Felagund's dying words in Canto IX (p. 357).

*There is no question that The Silmarillion itself did go to Allen & Unwin at this time. My father made a note while it was gone about changes to be made to it when it came back to him, and he specifically acknowledged the return of it (Letters p. 27): 'I have received safely ... the Geste (in verse) and the Silmarillion and related fragments.'

*There was not in fact a great deal more to be done in reworking the 1930 text: the new version extended (in some 40,000 words) to part way through Chapter XXI, Of Túrin Turambar.

†This may seem a rather surprising thing to say; but it is to be remembered that he had abandoned the poem six years before, and was at this time absorbed in the perfecting of the prose Silmarillion.